A Cow Among Cows. Bull Calf Destiny. Spoiling a Fine Boy. 2 Accidents, 2 Killed.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 3.

ALMOST as interesting at Mt. Rainier or the Pacific coast is E. A. Stuart's "carnation" dairy farm, 30 miles from this city.

Stumps of cedar trees, 19 feet in diameter, have been cleared from 1,000 acres of land, and where bears and mountain lions once ruled, sleek Holstein cows graze on smooth meadows or in their stalls, eat "contented," a mixture of freshly cut green oats and cow peas.

BESIDE the road stands a more-than-life size statue of "Prospect," greatest cow that ever lived.

Every day for two years she was milked four times a day and gave 48 quarts of milk every 24 hours. She stands on her pedestal, placid, benevolent, her milk veins as big as your wrist. Many a hero has done less than this honest cow-marvel to earn a statue.

FASCINATINGLY variegated is the destiny of the pure-bred young Holstein bulls, sons of contented mothers and held for as much as $10,000 each.

Mr. Stuart paid more than $100,000 for one bull, father of many calves.

Some of the young bulls go to farmers in this state, improving the native breed.

Some are shipped to Japan, where an intelligent government constantly improves the grade of live stock.

STRANGE is the destiny of young Seattle Holstein bulls shipped to India. They are mated with fragile little Hindu cows with bumps on their backs. Calves born of this union have no bumps, are black and white, and grow twice as big as their mothers.

YOU couldn't make any young Holstein believe in a superior being, able to control his destiny and make him the father of a half-breed Hindu cow.

You can't make some men believe in any being sufficiently powerful or intelligent to control their destiny.

A BRILLIANT boy from this city, Wilbur B. Huston, son of Bishop Huston, selected as the brightest American boy, will be trained to succeed Thomas A. Edison. He will not succeed Thomas A. Edison, of course. The mere fact of his selection, the undeserved process of "spoiling" to which he will be subjected, could make that impossible, even if he had Edison's genius.

THE boy will "address large audiences" on "how it feels to be the brightest boy in America." He is to enjoy the sensation of seeing himself an "important person."

That was not how Edison began. He thought about a telegraph instrument, and how to send two messages over the same wire. He didn't listen to grown people praising Thomas A. Edison.

YOUNG Wilber is a good boy. To the test question "What would you do if you had a million dollars?" he answered that he would use it in parish work for the church.

Edison wouldn't have given you that answer 70 years ago.

IN Texas Tom Chandler is shot and killed by a United States prohibition agent in a raid on Chandler's farm. The prohibition agent says it was an accident—he stumbled and his rifle was discharged.

IN Tokio, Prince Hsien-Kai, cousin of Pi-Yi, once China's boy emperor, is dead of bullet wounds inflicted by Chang Tsung Chang, former Chinese war lord.

The young prince was shot standing at the entrance of Chang's hotel. Chang says it was an accident.

He was examining his pistol at a window.

ACCIDENTAL shots can be very destructive. The man in Texas was shot through the heart. The Chinese prince was shot several times.

THE United States battle fleet anchored off this city on the deep waters of Puget Sound, are visited today by two Japanese cruisers, Asama and Iwate. They bring 250 midshipmen, learning about the sea and ships before becoming fully commissioned officers. Asama and Iwate are old boats used for education.

The young Japanese gentlemen and their superior Japanese officers, are hospitably received by Seattle and our navy.

Their keen eyes will see everything. In the evening when they talk things over on their old training ships it will amuse them to know that this country, in a moment of hysterical flapdoodle

LIQUOR RING INQUIRY GOES ON UNABATED

District Attorney Rosenberg Found Dead in Office, Own Revolver in His Hand

"Big Ed" Wonsetter Tells Judge of Liquor Dealings; State Police Chief in Probe

By AL GOUGH, Sun-Telegraph Staff Correspondent.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., Aug. 3.—Death wrote another chapter of blood into Fayette County's tangled story of bootleg profits and political strife today.

District Attorney N. W. Rosenberg was found dead in his office in the Cray Building. There was a bullet wound in his head. From his right hand dangled a pistol. Coroner S. A. Baltz pronounced the death a suicide.

The discovery was made four days after John Donohoe, politician and unofficial assistant to County Detective A. S. Downing, was slain in his own car on a remote road. Investigators believe that two men beat Donohoe insensible, then pumped 12 bullets into him.

FOLLOWS 'BIG ED'S' QUIZ

Rosenberg's death came one day after state police investigating the crime questioned "Big Ed" Wonsetter, convicted bootlegger. Wonsetter told nothing of the actual slaying, but he did reveal the name of the man he had paid for protection, which, he said, he did not receive. He revealed also that man's relation to certain officials.

Maj. Lynn Adams, commandant of the state police, arrived in Uniontown and called a conference of troopers and county officials

FRENCH FLIERS TO HOP FOR U. S.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—(US.)—Captain Dieudonne Costes and Maurice Bellonte, famous French aviators who turned back near the Azores in the first Paris-to-New York trans-Atlantic air race that ended in disaster for their Polish competitors, tonight are fueling their plane Question Mark for an early hopoff tomorrow for New York.

Captain Costes and Bellonte, radioman and mechanic, took off for New York from Lebourget on the morning of July 13, shortly after the Polish flyers, Major Ludwig Idzikowski and Major Casimir Kubala had piloted the way in the first ocean air race. Costes and Bellonte returned after almost 28 hours in the air, landing at Villa Coublay field, near Paris.

While Costes and Bellonte were turning about in the face of severe storms near the Azores, the Poles continued onward, only to have their plane the Marshal Pilsudski, overturn and catch fire on the rocky island of Graciosa. Here Idzikowski was killed in the explosion. Kubla, severely injured and burned, sur-

King George Able To Resume Duties

LONDON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Because of continued good progress, King George has been able to transact business personally during the past few days and has spent several hours at his desk dealing with matters previously handled by his secretary. Although he has not been outside Buckingham Palace since his last operation, this was said largely to be due to unsuitable weather.

Southampton Honors Coolidge at Reunion

SOUTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge were the guests of honor at the thirty-third annual reunion of the Sons and Daughters of Southampton here today. The former president and Mrs. Coolidge were made members of the association.

Downtown Fire Laid To Workman's Torch

Fire which broke out in the second floor of the new Crafts Building, Penn avenue and Fancourt street, Saturday, caused damage estimated at $50. An overheated torch used in the repair of electric batteries by workmen of the Pittsburgh School of Auto Engineering was blamed for starting the fire.

Heat Blamed for Strike Of 400 at Plant Here

The recent torrid weather was blamed by company officials for the walkout of several hundred employes of the Pressed Steel Car Company at McKees Rocks last week.

About 400 riveters working on steel cars tossed down their tools and walked out of the plant. Steel freight cars are built in the plant on the "track system," by which the cars move through the plant slowly on tracks during the course of erection. When the riveters quit, the rest of the employes were unable to do their part of the job, officials explained.

AGREEMENT REACHED

Through efforts of Miss M. Emmilinne Pitt, mediator for the United States Department of Labor, an agreement was reached Saturday by which all the employes are expected to return to work Monday. She explained that complaints about working conditions had been transmitted from the men to the company officials and that an understanding has been reached whereby the men will return Monday morning. In all about 1,500 men were affected by the walkout. They have been out for several days.

OFFICIAL'S STATEMENT

W. C. Wrenshaw, superintendent of the plant, said that there was no demand made by the men for increased wages. "It was simply a case of too much heat and we think that we have been able to arrange conditions so that all of the men will be back Monday," he said Saturday. He explained that there were about 185 riveters on each of the two tracks in the plant and that their quitting work affected the other workers in the plant.

SNOOK WRITING HIS TESTIMONY, RETAINS CALM

Professor, to Take Witness Stand in Own Defense, Sketches Notes in Cell.

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN. International News Service.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug 3.—Dr. James H. Snook, whose Jekyl-Hyde characteristics and "hidden past" were disclosed in an illuminating manner in court today at his trial for the murder of Theora Hix, young Ohio State University co-ed, was rehearsing in his cell tonight the testimony he will give when he takes the witness stand in his own behalf.

The bald-headed ex-college professor makes occasional notes in court as he reclines on a gaudy-hued canvas beach chair under the noses of the jury, and at night he writes out his own deductions. Then, according to grapevine information from the jail, he throws away the manuscript.

MRS. SNOOK TO TESTIFY

Dr. Snook's wife will be called to testify in her husband's behalf Defense Counsel E. G. Ricketts announced late today. He would not amplify the statement nor reveal the trend which her testimony might take.

Today, as he lolled at ease on the camp chair provided for his comfort because he is indisposed as the result of a spinal fluid operation, Dr. Snook listened impassively as witnesses told the jury revealing and interesting details concerning his past life with Theora.

CALM UNDER TESTIMONY

He never batted an eye as Chemist Charles F. Long, state witness, testified that he had found two drugs, supposedly stimulants, in the stomach of the slain Miss Hix. The state is trying to prove that shortly before the co-ed was hammered and slashed to death, Snook gave her a drug-laden sandwich and, when she repulsed him after he had taken her on an automobile ride to a lonely

Ruth Elder Enters Woman's Air Derby

CLEVELAND, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Ruth Elder, of ocean-flying fame, today entered the woman's air derby from Santa Monica, Cal., to Cleveland as part of the national air races. She arrived by plane late last night. She planned to leave Cleveland late today, flying over the derby route.

Fletcher, Ex-Envoy, Quits Italy for U. S.

NAPLES, Italy, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The liner Augustus sailed from this port today with the retiring American ambassador, Henry P. Fletcher, and Mrs. Fletcher among the passengers. Consul General Homer M. Byington was among the party gathered to say farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher.

Bandits Get $2,000 Candy Firm Payroll

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Two bandits seized a $2,000 payroll from the cashier and assistant cashier of the National Candy Company in the lobby of the company's doowntown building here today and escaped in a waiting automobile.

Fire Truck Wins Prize, Wrecks On Way Home

THE Dormont combination hook and ladder and pumper truck won a silver loving cup at Brentwood Saturday as the best combination hook and ladder and pumper truck on exhibition.

On the way home the truck was hit by a street car in West Liberty avenue and had to be towed in. The cup was not damaged.

SUPPOSED CLUE IN DAPPER CASE PROVES BLANK

Man Said to Know Death Car Driver Brands Story of Father-in-Law 'Crazy.'

For a few brief moments on Saturday police thought they had a genuine clue to the 11-months-old murder of Dr. Harry R. Dapper, Carrick physician.

Patrolman Joseph Scanlon testified in Morals Court that one John Regan, of East Jefferson street, had told him that the Regan son-in-law, Harry J. Stumpf, 26, knew who shot the doctor.

Stumpf was already under arrest for beating up a man who had boasted of having a date with Mrs. Stumpf.

Police turned Stumpf over to county detectives, who had charge of the Dapper investigation.

"He's crazy," Stumpf described his father-in-law. "I don't know anything about that murder."

Chief George W. Murren quizzed him, lined him up for witnesses and finally discharged him.

"A bum clue," Murren announced.

HERD GETS NEW JOB WITH CITY

William Herd, Republican chairman of the Twenty-fifth Ward, who was discharged last January by Controller Henry O. Evans, has been appointed superintendent of the city Bureau of Bridges, at $3,600 a year.

Herd had been employed as a field auditor at $2,400 in the controller's office for years before Evans was elected by Council to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John H. Henderson.

Evans' announced reason for discharging Herd was his continued absence from the office without permission.

Herd will have supervision of about 50 men in the Bureau of Bridges, who make repairs to structures other than those made by contractors after competitive bids are received.

J. T. Gray, former superintendent of the Bridge Bureau, who has been employed by the city for more than 22 years, resigned two weeks ago effective August 1.

Director Edward G. Lang, of the Department of Public Works, appointed Herd last Thursday, but news of that action could not be confirmed until Saturday.

John D. Stevenson, assistant city engineer in charge of the Bureau of Bridges, declared he did not know why Gray resigned.

Gray was silent on the resignation except to say in reply to a question that he had not been forced out.

Boys Playing With Powder Die of Burns

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Joseph Lemonvich, 13, and William Seminoff, 15, were fatally burned at Vestaburg late Saturday, when a can of black powder with which they were playing exploded. It is believed they let a lighted match touch the powder.

Policeman J. W. Thanning heard the explosion and found the boys with their clothing in flames. They were rushed to the hospital here, where they died.

Mussell Shell Gives Pearl Worth $2,000

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Opening mussel shells in quest of bait for hi. fishing lines, Arthur Ramsey, pound master of Poplar Bluff, yesterday found a pearl which local jewelers estimated to be worth $2,000. It was taken from the Black River, north of here. Ramsey was on an annual fishing trip. The pearl weighed 17½ grains.

Zep Will Carry Six Nations' Delegates On Round-World Trip

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND,

Who will be correspondent-in-chief on board the Graf Zeppelin for the Hearst and allied newspapers during the Hearst-Eckener world flight.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Six nations will be represented on board the Graf Zeppelin when the giant two-blocks long silver ship of the air starts on the Hearst-Eckener world flight—the greatest adventure of the air yet undertaken—the flight around the world. They are Germany, America, England, France, Russia, Japan. A seventh country, Australia, may be added if Sir Hubert Wilkins, famous explorer, finds upon arrival here that he can go with us.

Von Wiegand

When the Graf Zeppelin, with well wishes, sporting and scientific interest of the entire civilized world focussed on it, turns majestically eastward to bring human realization to a Jules Verne dream, there will be probably 60 souls on board—one woman and 59 men. Of these, 19 or 20 will be passengers and 40 or 41 crew.

Tires of Society

The woman will be Lady Drummond Hay, who, tired of society, turned to journalism, travel and air adventure. In the short period of four years she has made herself one of England's outstanding woman journalists. She was the first woman to cross the Atlantic by air from East to West and now seeks the distinction of being the first woman to fly around the globe. Her coolness and bravery on the trans-Atlantic flight and her writing ability won for her this chance for which so many women are so insistently applying to us. Lady Drummond arrived here from Nanking, in China, a few days ago.

From Peiping, if we had to come that far south, it would be a straight line then eastward to Tokio. In Japan the Graf Zeppelin will land at the Japanese naval aerodrome at Kasumiga-Ura, about 45 miles from Tokio. There is a large Zeppelin hangar there which formerly was at Jueterbog, near Berlin, Germany. The Japanese navy has been most friendly in its co-operation in the Far East and tendered Commodore Eckener the use of the hangar for the Graf Zeppelin. Admiral Okada, minister of marine, suggested to me that I examine the facilities at Kasumiga-Ura. I found that the hangar is long enough to house the Graf Zeppelin, but with only three feet to spare. As it is scarcely 18 inches higher than the big airship, it would be impossible to put the Graf Zeppelin into the hangar by manpower alone.

Long Pacific Flight

The Japanese ministry of marine immediately, at my suggestion, put down "docking rails" to which the Graf Zeppelin will be fastened and shoved into the big shed.

Karl Beuerle, one of the chief engineers of the Graf Zeppelin, has

Press Agent's 'Bomb' in Auto Only Wood Ball

GREENVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.

WHEN Rel Hoskins, Conneaut Lake Park publicity man found what he thought was a bomb in his automobile here this week, he made page one without effort.

The local police force became excited and sent for aid to Sharon. Two carloads of officers sped here from Sharon and Farrell. They lifted the supposed instrument of death tenderly out of the car and examined it gingerly.

Finally a Greenville fireman rubbed a bit of paper off the outside. The "bomb" proved only an old bowling ball in disguise Chief of Police Harry Barber placed it on display.

ZEP IS RIDING OCEAN GALE; DUE TODAY

Speed Reduced by Rough Weather, May Not Land Until Late in Evening

Heads North of Bermuda; Lakehurst Arrival Time Disrupted by Elements

By DAVID P. SENTNER. International News Service.

BULLETIN.

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The Cape Elizabeth Naval Wireless Station at 10 p. m. (Pittsburgh time) picked up the following message from the Graf Zeppelin:

"Position 35 degrees, 32 minutes north, 55 degrees, 5 minutes west, speed 115 kilometers. Expect to arrive at Lakehurst early Sunday afternoon.

"SIEDEL."

LAKEHURST, N. J., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—A sudden rainstorm spouting across the path of the Graf Zeppelin, trans-Atlantic dirigible, delayed its progress and may postpone its arrival here until late Sunday evening or until Monday morning, according to a report received from the dirigible tonight.

The airship, with its load of 60 persons, is believed to be in a low pressure area with unfavorable winds accompanied by clouds and showers.

NO WORRY

The air mammoth is scheduled to sail through the rainstorm which is sweeping toward the Atlantic coast. In addition, northwest winds blowing along the coast are expected to delay the dirigible somewhat tomorrow.

The fact that Dr. Hugo Eckener apparently is heading straight for Lakehurst indicates that he is unworried by the elemental disturbances.

The airship late this afternoon reported her position as latitude 37 degrees North, 50 degrees, everybody aboard happy. This would place the ship 1,250 miles from Lakehurst.

The ship was maintaining a speed of 65 miles an hour, according to radio reports.

DUE AFTER NOON

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—The giant Graf Zeppelin, now ploughing its way northwestward over the Atlantic near Bermuda, is expected to land at Lakehurst, N. J., United States Naval Air Station "sometime after noon Sunday," according to advices direct from the Zeppelin works at Friedrichshafen.

When the take-off was made at 3.29 a. m. Thursday (10.29 p. m. New York daylight time), Dr. Eck-

First of Mayor Kline's Movies in Parks Tonight

"West Point" has been substituted for "The Big Parade" as the Schenley Park show inaugurating free Sunday night motion picture exhibitions in city parks.

The programs at the other parks will remain the same as previously announced: Highland Park, "Ben-Hur;" West Park, North Side, "The Last Command;" McKinley Park, South Hills, "Old Ironsides."

The band concert scheduled Sunday night in Schenley Park will begin at 7:30 p. m. and end in time to begin the motion picture at 9 p. m., simultaneously with the shows in the other parks.

"The Big Parade" had to be eliminated, as a test proved it would run for more than 2½ hours, which would have brought the end of the picture close to midnight, according to announcement Saturday at the office of Mayor Charles H. Kline.

The Mayor insisted the programs, besides being clean and educational, must not be of a length that would keep the children in the audience out too late.

All the material and labor needed in showing the pictures have been donated free of cost to the city, except a few incidentals that will be bought with funds raised by voluntary subscriptions.

Zeppelin Will Carry 60 on First Round-World Flight

AIRSHIP FLIGHT AROUND WORLD STARTS AT N. Y.

One Woman, Lady Hay, to Make Trip — 5,200-Mile Watery Stretch Faced.

arrived at Tokio with a spare motor. The American Carbide and Carbon Company has sent a special technical engineer to Tokio, to supervise the arrangements for the refueling and re-gassing of the airship. Japan is taking the liveliest interest in the world flight.

From Friedrichsafen to Tokio will in distance be the longest non-stop flight yet attempted. Approximately it will be 6,500 miles.

When we take off at Kasumaiga-Ura, the Pacific, as yet unconquered, will be before us. The next landing is Mines Field Aerodrome at Los Angeles. It is a watery stretch of some 5,200 miles. Tentatively the route of the Graf Zeppelin will be northeastward from Tokio to within about 200 miles of the Aleutian Islands, and along the Great Circle track of the steamship lines between Victoria and Seattle and Yokohama. I recently studied that route with Capt. Alvin C. Lustie, of the Dollar Line SS. President Jefferson, and Capt. Johnson, of the President Madison, two noted navigators.

Fog Flight Likely

A considerable part of that stretch we shall probably have to fly in fog, but with favorable winds the greater part of the distance, assuring a record crossing on the Pacific. If we should touch the American continent as far north as Seattle and there is no fog, it is planned to show the Zeppelin to people on the coast in San Francisco, Oakland and Berkeley, over which we would very much like to circle if fogs do not prevent us showing off the "silver streak."

On the way down the California coast, the Graf Zeppelin, if it is possible, will make its bow to William Randolph Hearst, at La Cuesta Encantada, his great ranch north of San Luis Obispo. It was Mr. Hearst's financial support that is making possible this, the first attempt in history, to circumnavigate the globe by air.

Follow Rail Route

A stay of probably 48 hours is contemplated at Los Angeles, for refuelling and re-gassing. The city of Los Angeles is borrowing the Navy's mooring mast at San Diego and temporarily erecting it at the Mines Field Aerodrome, for the Graf Zeppelin to moor to.

The course mapped out for the Graf Zeppelin from Los Angeles will closely follow the Southern Pacific Railway along the Mexican border through Tucson to El Paso. If time and weather conditions permit, Commander Eckener and Flight Commander Lehmann may deviate just enough to pass over Phoenix, where I began my newspaper career.

The route from El Paso to New York is in the lap of the gods—the gods of winds and weather. It will, to a large extent, be a game of hide and seek with thunderstorms, which we shall dodge with all the speed that is in the five big motors. Commander Eckener, I know, is eager to fly over St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee, three cities for which he has a warm spot in his heart. Also, he wants to salute President Hoover in Washington from the Graf Zeppelin. The "finish" of this epochal world flight is to be the Statue of Liberty, in view of hundreds of thousands, if it is daytime.

The great adventure is a thrilling prospect.

Three Naval Observers

Three naval officers will be on board the Graf Zeppelin, as observers. Lieut. Com. Charles E. Rosendahl, who made the trans-Atlantic flight with us last October, will be the guest of Mr. William Randolph Hearst on the world flight.

Lieut. J. G. Richardson, of the United States Navy, will be on board representing the American Navy.

The Japanese navy was invited by Commodore Eckener to send a naval officer as his guest. As a result of this invitation, Lieut. Com. Fushimoto, of the air service of the Japanese navy, will make the trip.

A Russian geographer, designated by the Soviet government in Moscow, will board the Graf Zeppelin in Friedrichshafen, to represent Russia. Two Japanese journalists and the correspondent of the Paris Matin, also will get on at Friedrichshafen.

Four Stages Planned

The Hearst-Eckener-Zeppelin round-the-world flight of the Graf Zeppelin will be unique, too, in that there will be two "starts" and two "finishes." The real starting point of the world flight is the Statue of Liberty in the harbor of New York, and that will be the "finishing line." But as the Graf Zeppelin will return to its home port—Friedrichshafen—it also will "finish" there.

The first flight around the world that history is about to record will be made in four stages. "Hops," the popular term used for airplanes, hardly applies to the gigantic stately Graf Zeppelin. It simply doesn't "hop." Commander Eckener fairly snorts at that term when applied to the great airship.

The first "leg" of the flight is from New York to Friedrichshafen in Germany. The very shortest distance is somewhat more than 4,000 miles, but in dodging the storm centers on the Atlantic, we shall probably take a changeable route of 5,000 miles.

In Friedrichshafen the Graf Zeppelin will be refueled and regassed. If rushed, that can be accomplished in 48 hours.

Then the Graf Zeppelin will turn its stub nose northeastward in the general direction of Moscow, cross Poland, pass over or near the Soviet capital, turning more and more eastward. For many hours we will pass over the endless, flat, monotonous steppes of Russia, with seldom a hill in relief on the table-like panorama slipping away beneath us, until we reach the Ural Mountains that mark the boundary of Russia and Siberia.

Route Not Fixed

As route is so much dependent on wind and weather, it is practically impossible to say in advance just what the course of the Graf Zeppelin will be except in a general way.

It is probable that we will enter Siberia, land of snow and ice and exiles, with its mountains, vast forests and steppes, in the vicinity of Yekaterinburg, that city put on the map of history as the place where the late Czar Nicholas and his family were exterminated.

As the farther north we go the shorter will be the distance to the Pacific, Commander Eckener and Flight Commander Capt. Ernst A. Lehmann, when last I talked with them, were laying the route far to the north of the trans-Siberian Railway. Dr. Eckener was eager to fly over territory that to this day has not been explored. It must be remembered that Siberia is larger than the United States.

Want to See Meteor

Especially did Dr. Eckener want to see the area of forests destroyed by the gigantic meteor that fell in Northern Siberia some years ago. A Russian explorer reported that fire and wind pressure from the enormous meteor, in part burned, in part leveled the forest flat with the ground for nearly 100 miles around the place where it struck and buried itself in the earth.

I believe, however, that Dr. Eckener and Capt. Lehmann will reconsider that route after the motor breakdown over France in the May start of the Graf Zeppelin for Lakehurst. For, if anything should necessitate landing in Northern Siberia, so far removed from all means of transportation, it would be impossible for us to get down the trans-Siberian Railway this winter. For that reason I believe our route will parallel the trans-Siberian road at no very great distance from it. It will be a longer stretch but more safe.

To Avoid Troop Zone

Tentatively it had been planned to pass over the mountains in Southeastern Siberia at the lower edge of Lake Baikal, cross the trans-Siberian Railway and then turn southward toward Japan by flying over Manchuria and Korea.

I hear, however, that the Soviet government has asked that we avoid the Lake Baikal region and Manchuria because of troop movements and concentrations, which seem to be going on there in connection with the Russo-Chinese "war scare." That may make necessary crossing the Sayan Mountains, south of Irkutsk, if we can find a suitable place to lift the ship over them, and pass over Mongolia and a corner of the dread Gobi Desert. That would mean a swing to the southward that could bring us near Pekin. We would pass over China's great wall, that wonder of the world, 2,500 miles long, built some 2,000 years ago. As the work of man, it impressed me more than the pyramids in Egypt, when I was on the great wall two years ago.

Passengers Begin Packing As Zep Noses Toward U. S.

By MME. RENE FREISSART GOUREVITCH,

Wife of the Russian Pianist, Gregory Gourevitch, and One of the Two Women Passengers Aboard the Graf Zeppelin in the Second Trans-Atlantic Flight. Special Wireless Dispatch.

ABOARD THE GRAF ZEPPELIN, Aug. 3.—We are now past the Azores, with another night behind us and are looking forward to our passing the Bermudas before day is done. Then we'll drop more mail, as we did at Santa Maria, in the Azores, and begin the last leg of our thrilling trip to Lakehurst.

Whether we shall enjoy our Sunday dinner in New York is not yet a certainty, but the officers believe that the Zeppelin is making sufficient speed to ply its way into the hangar with the Los Angeles by sometime early Sunday, at least. Here's a secret, too—some of us have begun to pack already.

BUSY TAKING PICTURES

Yesterday we were very busy. Everyone, with still and movie cameras, was photographing everybody else. We were so jolly during dinner, especially after passing that queer looking island of Santa Maria. The isle was all marked with fields and it looked like a checkerboard. Beautiful little houses cornered every lot.

I am so glad we've come this far, and I was especially thrilled to see them drop the mail in sacks. But what I wonder is, whether the peasants will take the mail to the post-office—if they ever find the sacks.

Everything is so lovely here, with the ship well appointed and well lighted, and rolling along so smoothly and evenly. One would hardly know one was on an airship, it is so steady and free from foreign noises. It might be some Paris salon, instead of a trans-Atlantic craft, speeding along through the day and night—the inevitable parade of commerce and progress.

FEW ISLANDS SEEN

It is rather a disappointment, and the only one I have experienced so far on this trip, to see so few islands in the Atlantic. They are so romantic. It was a compensation worth the entire trip when we passed over Majorca on our way out into the Atlantic.

It was there that Chopin lived with George Sand, and it recalled the many times I have enjoyed listening to my husband's frequent interpretations of Chopin's dreams, inspired by his sojourn there.

U. S. AIR CHIEFS WILL WELCOME GRAF ZEPPELIN

Group to Leave Capital For Lakehurst; Military Reception Not in Order.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Government air officials today were planning a cordial welcome for Germany's giant air liner as the Graf Zeppelin ploughed her way toward Lakehurst, N. J.

Because the Zeppelin is a commercial craft, no official military reception will be accorded the Germans, but in the huge crowd that will gather to watch the big ship arrive will be the highest of American air officials.

David J. Ingalls, navy air secretary, will head the Navy group which will leave here early tomorrow morning for Lakehurst.

NAVAL AIR CHIEF TO GO

With him will go Commander J. H. Towers, acting chief of naval aeronautics, in the absence of Admiral William H. Moffett. A number of other naval air offcials expect to make the trip.

In the Army group which will go to Lakehurst will be a number of fliers from Bolling Field. Two members of the German legation are expected to fly up with the Army group, as are representatives of the Zeppelin Company, who will go up to examine the mooring facilities at Lakehurst with a view of establishing a landing point near Fairbanks, Alaska, when the German ship begins its round-the-world trip.

SCIENTISTS IN GROUP

Several scientists from government departments will go up in the hope of getting new data from Commander Eckener and his engineers regarding magnetic deviation.

The Commerce Department is cooperating with Army and Navy officials in their efforts to police the air surrounding Lakehurst in order that the Graf may have clear space for mooring. All planes going to Lakehurst will be staked down several hours before the Zeppelin is due to arrive, Navy officials announced, and will not be allowed to take off until the big ship is safely in its hangar.

Husband Shoots Wife, Then Kills Himself

A sixteen-year-old Negro wife jumped to death with a bullet wound in in her abdomen as her husband, a few years older, shot himself to death Saturday night at 1030 Wheeler street, near Brushton.

The pair, pronounced dead at the Pittsburgh Hospital, are Mrs. Lillian Mills and William Alonzo Mills.

Married April 10, they have been quarreling for several weeks, neighbors said. The argument ended when the husband sent a bullet into the woman'se body and she jumped from the second floor to a brick court below. He then sent three bullets into his chest and side.

WINDS RISING IN ZEPPELIN PATH; NEARING U. S.

Dirigible Heading North of Bermudas; Speed May Be Reduced by Weather.

ener said he expected to make the flight in approximately 80 hours.

The strong headwinds encountered over Europe on the way to Gibraltar and the low-pressure areas between the Azores and the Bermuda Islands, however, are expected to cut the speed of the dirigible to less than the 75-mile cruising speed maximum, not permitting the Graf to make the crossing in less than 86 hours at the least.

That the Graf was making steady progress all last night and this morning was evidenced in messages from the ship to Friedrichshafen and U. S. Naval wireless stations and the stations at Chatham, Mass., and Tuckerton, N. J.

NORTH OF BERMUDAS

Press messages began to trickle through the ether from the Graf as early as 2 o'clock this morning, when, Sir Hubert Wilkins tried first contact with American stations from a point 200 miles southwest of the Azores.

Since then, the position broadcast by the Zeppelin have placed the huge commercial carrier heading toward the Atlntic coast on a course that would pass to the north of the Bermudas. It was expected, however, that the Zeppelin would pass over one of the English islands and drop mail there, then speed northward.

It was during the present part of the journey and in almost the same spot over the Atlantic that the Zeppelin ran into the gale which threatened to beat it back to a forced landing in the Bermudas last October.

But the sturdy dirigible battered its way through the storm and freakish winds with only minor damage done to the covering of its port stabilizer. This was repaired on the way.

STOWAWAY LOCKED UP

Radiograms from the Graf Zeppelin last night established beyond all doubt that a stowaway is aboard the giant dirigible. He is not allowed to converse with the passengers, however, and is far from being made a "hero" for his foolhardy feat.

Instead, he has been locked in a makeshift "brig" in the interior of the Zeppelin's gas bag. It is understood he will be deported as soon as the Zeppelin arrives at Lakehurst.

BROADCAST OF ARRIVAL

The National Broadcasting Company tonight announced plans to broadcast on a nation-wide hookup a description of the progress of the Graf Zeppelin from the moment it appears over the United States until it comes to rest at Lakehurst, N. J. Arrangements have also been made to put officers and passengers of the ship on the air to describe their flight immediately after they arrive.

Minister Given $2 for Wedding, Pays $2 Fine

WHEELING, W. Va., Aug. 3.

THE Rev. J. H. A. Bomberger came out exactly even, financially, on a recent wedding. The minister received a $2 fee. He parked his car overtime to perform the ceremony and paid the police department $2.

Woman Finds Zeppelin Thrill Outdoes Liners

By MRS. JEANETTE CROUSE

Wife of George E. Crouse, Syracuse Merchant Known as the "Zeppelin Straphanger," and One of the Two Women Passengers Aboard the Graf Zeppelin on its Second trans-Atlantic Flight.

(Universal Service Special Radio Direct from the Graf Zeppelin)

ABOARD THE GRAF ZEPPELIN, Aug. 3.—The Graf Zeppelin is steadily plunging toward the United States Naval air station at Lakehurst, battling cross winds and avoiding an area of low pressure toward the north, as I am writing this dispatch 700 feet in the air and midway between the Azores and the Bermudas, shortly after noon today.

Not one untoward event has marred our splendid trip. We have been enjoying ourselves much in the manner one does aboard the speediest and largest ocean liners, except that the thrill is much greater.

COOLER NOW

I really cannot imagine any more delightful style of traveling.

I have slept wonderfully well since coming aboard the Graf. The air is quite a bit easier to sleep in than one might believe.

It is much cooler now as we glide over the Atlantic; much more than over the Mediterranean and the journey to the Azores, when we were fanned by breezes from the Sahara Desert.

We have been in constant communication with American wireless stations since 2 o'clock this morning.

Passengers have already formed a pool, each picking a time near Sunday noon which he believes to be the most probable minute of landing.

Zeppelin Radio Picked Up Here

"All well. Strong headwinds in path. Send detailed weather reports."

This brief message in radio code was intercepted from the Graf Zeppelin by the short wave station of KDKA at East Pittsburgh last night. Later KDKA made an attempt to establish a two-way communication with the ship with a view to broadcasting messages from Dr. Hugo Eckener and Capt. Hubert Wilkins to Commander Richard Byrd in Antarctica.

Details of the Graf's arrival at Lakehurst, N. J., as well as talks by the pilot and passengers, will be broadcast over KDKA, WCAE and WJAS late today or tonight.

MALONE TALKS TO VETS, DUNN BOOM GROWING

Democratic Choice for Mayor Likely to Be Announced After Wednesday Meeting.

Likening the duties of soldiers in battle for their country with the unselfish devotion to service that should govern the people's elected officials, President of Council James F. Malone, Republican candidate for Mayor, greeted members and friends of the Eightieth Division Veterans' Association at a picnic Saturday in West View Park.

He pointed to his 12 years of service to the people of Pittsburgh as a councilman as fitting him for the Mayor's office.

The speaker referred to major public improvements that must be completed in connection with a comprehensive plan of city development. The larger projects must not prevent the completing of numerous neighborhood improvements, Malone said.

Children must have proper environment for their education and health, Malone declared in advocating proper recreation and playground facilities.

DEMOCRATS LEAN TO DUNN

E. Lowry Humes, chairman of the Democratic committee of 100 formed to select a mayoralty candidate, has called a meeting of that body for Wednesday night in the Fort Pitt Hotel. The trend in the committee seems to be toward Thomas A. Dunn.

A flock of candidates for Council have taken out nominating papers. They include W. F. Beatty, Mrs. Anne Winner, Robert S. Craig, Franklin P. Booth, M. F. Griffith, M. J. Muldowney, a member of the State Legislature; Robert D. Boston, the Rev. A. V. B. Hightower, a Negro clergyman; Roger McKelvey and T. D. Malone, lieutenant of detectives. William N. McNair has taken out papers as a Democratic councilmanic aspirant.

SHERIFF FIGHT WARM

Signs point to a pretty fight for sheriff. Representative Arthur Storer, a deputy, is an avowed candidate who has been conducting an active campaign for some time. Capt. Robert S. Cain, former county commissioner; Albert Lorch, the bandit battling squire from Allison Park; John (Honus) Wagner, J. J. (Troubles) McInerney and A. W. McMillen, of Carnegie, have taken out papers.

There are a large number of candidates for the Republican nomination for Jury Commissioner, among them Thomas H. Logan, of Irwin avenue. Mr. Logan states that his petitions have been signed by District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner, Senator Morris Einstein, Congressman Stephen G. Porter, Dr. F. H. Frederick and Representative Samuel J. Grenet.

MARTIN ON AIR AGAIN

There is talk of opposition to Alderman John Verona in the Third Ward. Herbert Reel, former soldier, already has announced his candidacy. William Price, defeated by Verona six years ago after a hectic battle, is considering entering, as are several others.

"City Government and Industrial Progress" is the subject to be discussed by Judge Richard W. Martin candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor, over KDKA Monday evening at 7:15 o'clock. This is the third radio talk to be given by Judge Martin since he inaugurated his speaking campaign.

Graf's Trip, Calm, Pleasant, Wilkins Radios

By SIR HUBERT WILKINS

Famous Explorer, Sailing Across The Atlantic on The Graf Zeppelin Special Wireless Dispatch

ABOARD GRAF ZEPPELIN, Aug. 3.—(Via Radio.)—If all goes well, by 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon we should be swinging over gay old Broadway.

This message, which we anticipate will be picked up by the radio station at Tuckerton, N. J., about 8 o'clock this afternoon, New York daylight saving time, finds us passing through lines of gulf weeds between which several whales are seen to be mingling their foamy wake with the waves tossed high by southerly winds.

It will be difficult for any weather condition to now arise to interfere with our certain progress toward a successful landing at Lakehurst. The warm winds from down below are so soothing that a langurous feeling has invaded the good ship Graf, and the thrill of the trip is gradually easing off into a feeling of comfort and ease that will make us sorry when it is over.

Like Railway Journey.

Sturdily slipping along, following in a general way the thirty-seventh parallel, we have spanned the hundreds of miles of ocean between the Azores and Bermuda, and when we were due tonight to possibly pick up the glimmering lights at Hamilton, it was like coming to the next station in a railway journey.

Below us, the Atlantic, our host of the days, is kicking and tossing restlessly, but the passengers aboard the sturdy Graf are serene and calm. We anticipate our landing at Lakehurst joyously, but beginning to dread the end of our pleasant air journey across the Atlantic.

North Wind Hampers.

Our breakfast this morning consisted of the usual delicacies, and everyone was busy between then and noon writing post cards and letters for the Bermuda mail bag. After the luncheon we played bridge and spent the forepart of the afternoon chatting in the saloon.

At 2 o'clock this morning, New York time, we were speeding along at about 60 miles an hour through typical broken trade wind clouds at an altitude of 700 feet. A 15-mile northerly wind was slightly unfavorable to us, and retarded our speed along the same westerly course we have been following. At that time, our position was 35 west longitude, 36 north latitude, several hundred miles southwest of the Azores, which we cleared at sunset last night and almost directly on the route followed by the Zeppelin last year when it encountered the furious storms that ripped the port stabilizer open.

But that didn't bother the passengers. At that moment, all were settled snugly in their berths, sleeping soundly. They were worn out by the tense atmosphere which pervaded the Graf while the gallant ship was struggling along all yesterday afternoon against the headwinds, trying to reach the Azores.

Drop Mail On Island.

It was 8:15 when we dropped several bags of mail on Santa Maria Island, casting them on a small point of land, near a group of houses. The islanders came curiously out of their homes to stare upward into the dim light at the giant silver cloud hovering above their houses. The course thereafter was clear and we made good progress.

My first direct radio message to the United States, filed for this account of the trip, was sent just as the passengers were struggling to see this little isle of Santa Maria. The Azores disrupted our dinner and the posting of the mail broke down the general formality.

Then began raillery and jollification which lasted well into the night. The saloon was divided into two parties: those who lack the musical sense but who possess strong voices, exhausted their knowledge of hymns, student and popular songs. Others, with a capacity for suffering silently, joined in the almost aimless card games.

Averaging 60-80 Miles.

The weather had been fine until we began to near the American continent. Every one is now quite familiar with his surroundings, but can scarcely keep in mind the fact we are eating up space at about 60 to 80 miles an hour. They are conscious, however, of the rapid approach toward Lakehurst, and the greetings they are to have with their friends.

Already we have placed bets on the exact time of our arrival, basing our conclusions on the speed made so far and the expectation that we will be pulled from the skies at Lakehurst around noon Sunday.

Boy Strikes Rock While Diving, Dies

WEIRTON, W. Va., Aug. 3.—Robert Frederick, 18, of Holliday's Cove, W. Va., died in a Steubenville Hospital last night as the result of injuries suffered when he dived off a spring board along the river and struck a rock, causing a fractured spine.

Calls to Friend Driving Truck, Run Down, Killed

"HELLO FRANK," called John Miele, of 617 Elm street, Saturday as he stood at Bigelow boulevard and Kirkpatrick street to an old friend approaching in a truck.

A moment later the truck skidded on the wet surface of the roadway, bounded over the curb onto the sidewalk, and struck Miele.

Two hours later Miele, 35, father of three children succumbed in the Passavant Hospital.

The driver, Frank Cambert, of 712 Wylie avenue, was turned over to the coroner, and was released under bond for the inquest.

"He was one of my best friends," Cambert told the coroner. "We went to school together."

Pittsburgh to Fight Auto Wrecks With Psychology

PITT WILL AID TEST BUREAU IN EXPERIMENT

Physical, Mental, Emotional Conditions and Reactions of Drivers to Be Probed.

Pittsburgh, it was announced Saturday, has been chosen by the National Safety Council as a laboratory for scientific investigation of the causes of automobile accidents.

Searching inquiry will be made by a corps of specialists into the mental alertness and emotional life, as well as the physical condition, of drivers who meet with mishap.

The Department of Public Welfare and the University of Pittsburgh are co-operating in the undertaking. An elaborate organization called the Accident Research Association has been set up, with offices and laboratories in the City-County Building.

MERCHANTS CO-OPERATE

Merchants are furnishing material for the study by requesting their truck drivers who have accidents to undergo the examination.

Complex and expensive apparatus has been installed to test eyesight, hearing, motor control and co-ordination, reaction time, and right and left-handedness.

In addition, psychologists and psychiatrists will inquire into the habits, personal and family history, and state of mind of the subjects. Such questions will be asked as these:

How much is usually eaten at the three principal meals, and when are they eaten?

What exercise is taken most?

What is done for recreation?

Is there any worry due to money matters, social affairs, family affairs, employment or health?

The aim is to find out the principal cause of each accident and as many of the contributing factors as possible. No attempt will be made to fix the responsibility for any accident. Whenever possible the driver will be given advice on how to avoid such an accident in the future.

TWO PHASES OF TEST

The examination will be in two parts. First will come a medical interview at the Department of Public Welfare, then psychological tests at the University of Pittsburgh. It is expected that at least two hours will be allowed for each part.

The investigations at the City-County Building will be conducted by Dr. Edward E. Mayer, director of the guidance clinic, and his associates. The research at the University of Pittsburgh will be directed by Dr. W. T. Root, head of the department of psychology, and Carroll A. Whitmer. The Research Bureau for Retail Training of the University of Pittsburgh, under the direction of Dr. James H. Greene, will co-operate with the psychologists.

Sidney J. Williams, director, and J. S. Baker, engineer, of the Public Safety Division, National Safety Council, with headquarters in Chicago, have been in Pittsburgh frequently to assist in the organization of the Accident Research Association. The National Safety Council is represented in Pittsburgh by Burton W. Marsh, traffic engineer, and George Clarkson, of the Better Traffic Committee.

Mrs. Enoch Rauh, director of public welfare, stated that the Accident Research Association would not publish or release information on individual accidents. Although work is now under way, it will take at least a year, it was said, to accumulate sufficient data on which to base general conclusions, and it probably will be necessary to continue the research for several years and possibly extend it to other cities before definite recommendations on safe driving practices can be made with assurance that they are scientifically sound.

$11,000 Robbery Suspect Released

George Schreiber, of 1263 Warlo street, was cleared of suspicion and ordered discharged in Central Police Court today in the $11,000 robbery of two Tech Food Products Company officials Monday afternoon. Lieutenant of Detectives Edward O'Rourke told Magistrate Thomas D. Jones an investigation had failed to connect Schreiber with the robbery at Thirty-fourth street and Penn avenue. John J. Fundy, of Etna, also arrested as a suspect, had been previously discharged.

GIRL SUING 'IT' FIANCE

CLARA'S MAN—Clara Bow, "It" girl of the screen, with Harry Richman, stage and night club comedian to whom she recently became engaged. Richman Saturday was named defendant in a notice of a suit for damages filed in United States District Court in Pittsburgh by a Squirrel Hill girl, Ellen Franks.

SQUIRES JOIN STATE GROUP

With a view of obtaining closer co-operation between the district attorney's office and the minor judiciary officials, the Aldermen, Justices of the Peace and Magistrates' Association of Allegheny County on Saturday became a constituent body of the State Magistrates' Association. The action was taken at a luncheon in the William Penn Hotel, attended by more than 75 aldermen and justices of the county.

The state organization, now flourishing in nine Pennsylvania counties, was declared to be a potent factor in elevating the standard of the minor judiciary and in protecting these officials in their rights according to law. The aldermen and justices are aiming to keep within their jurisdiction many classes of cases which at present are declared to be taken over by burgesses who set up regular summary courts in many boroughs.

A. W. McMillen, of Carnegie, president of the county association and dean of Western Pennsylvania squires, presided. The principal addresses were made by Andrew Park, assistant district attorney, and J. H. Moser, of Scranton, organizer of the state association. Park commended the move for closer co-operation between the minor judiciary and his office and promised assistance in the handling of cases. Mr. Moser said that the organization soon would be extended to all parts of Pennsylvania.

The local officers, besides President McMillen, are: C. B. Burns, Finley Township, vice president; Sol S. Goldstein, Fourteenth Ward, Pittsburgh, secretary, and Mrs. Margaret Morgan, Sewickley, treasurer.

Clothes on Bank, Body Found in River

River Patrolman Charles Snyder found the body of Regis McCaffrey, 25, in the Allegheny River at the foot of Eighth street Saturday. His clothes were found on the river bank Friday. Mrs. Della McCaffrey, 1010 Seitz street, mother of the drowned man, said he had been rooming downtown and had a wife and child, "living somewhere in the country."

RAIN HOLDS UP PARK OPENING

Rain caused the postponement of the formal dedication of Brentwood's municipal park Saturday. It will be held next Saturday.

A flag raising by Troop No. 112, Brentwood Boy Scouts, headed by Scoutmaster Charles Robbins, was held in the park in the early afternoon. A parade in which 21 fire companies of Allegheny County, civic organizations and municipal bands from other municipalities; 100 floats, and 200 prvate automobiles were in line of march.

Included in the parade were fire companies of Brentwood, Baldwin Township, Option, Monongahela, Turtle Creek, Crafton, Bethel Township, Mt. Oliver, East Carnegie, Dormont, Mt. Lebanon, Castle Shannon, Overbrook, Sewickley, Bridgeville, Stowe Township, Glendale, Whitaker, Braddock, Broughton and Pitcairn.

Silver loving cups were awarded to the following fire companies before rain spoiled the program:

Monongahela, first prize for the most men in line; Pitcairn, two cups for the best appearance and for the company coming the greatest distance; Turtle Creek, the best heavy pumper; Baldwin Township, for the best light pumper, and Dormont for the best hook and ladder combination.

A. G. Kaufmann, president of Brentwood council, was general chairman and George Morgan was chairman of the reception committee.

At next Saturday's celebration, Councilman Daniel Winters and C. H. Bracken, borough solicitor, will deliver the principal addresses. It will be an all-day affair, with swimming and athletic events. A parachute jump will be an added attraction, followed by dancing in the park's shelter house in the evening.

Woman Driver Hurt In Trolley Crash

Elizabeth Dunlap, of 6 Mueller avenue, Crafton, was injured and passengers on a street car were shaken up when Miss Dunlap's auto was struck by another machine and thrown against the street car in the 1300 block of West Carson street Saturday.

Miss Dunlap was reported in fair condition in South Side Hospital.

Police arrested the driver of the second car, Ben Burak, of 2704 Carson street.

Soho Trade Board Outing on Tuesday

The fifth annual picnic of the Soho Board of Trade will be held at Kennywood Park Tuesday. Arrangements have been made to handle a crowd of 15,000. City and county officials, among them Mayor Charles H. Kline and State Senator James J. Coyne, are scheduled to make addresses over the "Voice of Kennywood," the park's internal radio broadcasting station. John A. Freyvogel is general chairman.

Girl Hurt in Fall Sues for $35,000

Because of a broken leg and spinal injuries suffered when she fell through boards laid over an excavation in the pavement, Helen Voros, 10, through her father, Kalman Voror, of Duquesne, has filed suit in Common Pleas Court for $35,000 damages against the city of Duquesne. The accident occurred July 8 in front of 906 Savey street, near the child's home.

DANCER, HERE, SUING FIANCE OF CLARA BOW

Harry Richman, Comedian of Stage and Films, Named In Beating Damage Suit.

A Pittsburgh dancer Saturday interrupted the honeymoon dreams of Harry Richman, stage and screen star, who recently announced his intention to marry Clara Bow, "It" girl of the movies.

Ellen Franks, of Pittsburgh, through Attorney Kivie Wolfe, filed notice in Federal Court of suit for damages against Richman. Wolfe would not affirm published reports that the Pittsburgh dancer would ask $250,000.

Miss Franks plans to accuse Richman of assault and battery, her attorney asserted. The alleged assault took place when Richman was in Pittsburgh as a featured player in "George White's Scandals" the week of March 4, Wolfe said.

WHAT'LL CLARA SAY?

The suit inspired movie-goers to a rapid-fire barrage of questions:

"What'll Clara think? Will she be mad? Will she give him back the ring? Or will she stand by him and say her man is innocent?"

The answers will have to come from Clara herself, although she has indicated that she isn't quite sure she'll stroll up the aisle with the Broadway comedian, who rose from the night clubs to an important salary on the musical comedy stage and a still more impressive salary in Hollywood.

"I won her with an iron hand," Richman has told of his wooing the famous red-head. "I was the caveman."

A million flappers can tell you what Clara answered when she heard about that.

"When," spoke the little girl who is described as the perfect example of sex appeal, "I want a cave man I'll advertise for him. I'm not at all sure I'll get married now."

And what will Clara say now?

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Harry Richman, screen actor, against whom a charge of assault and battery was filed by Ellen Franks in Pittsburgh today said he did not know the dancer.

"It is just a publicity stunt on her part," Richman said.

Clara Bow, titian haired film actress, who recently announced her engagement to Richman, was unconcerned. When asked to comment on the suit she said: "That's Harry's business."

Gardner to Leave For Tour of West

District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner is leaving Monday with Mrs. Gardner and their daughter, Miss Lucile Gardner, for a month's automobile tour through the West, stopping at resorts in Wisconsin and Minnesota. Mr. Gardner has toured every section of the United States and crossed the Rocky Mountains several times on his annual summer trips, at times driving 300 or more miles a day. During his absence, First Assistant District Attorney Andrew T. Park will be in charge of the office.

Royal Chalet Fired Upon by Communist

BRUSSELS, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—A Communist fired revolver shots near the Belgian Royal Chalet at Ostend Thursday night, it was reported here today. Prince Charles, second son of King Albert, and Princess Marie Jose, the Belgian majesties' youngest child, were staying at the residence.

Weather Outlook For This Week

OHIO VALLEY and Tennessee—A period of showers about Wednesday and again at the end of the week. Cool the first half, followed by warmer the latter half.

North and Middle Atlantic States—A period of showers about Thursday. Cool the first half of the week, followed by slowly rising temperature, becoming fairly warm toward the end of the week, particularly in the Middle Atlantic States.

Region of the Great Lakes—Fair at beginning followed by shower period toward middle of week, probably fair at close; moderate temperature Monday, followed by warmer.

CAMPUS CUPID ENSNARES DEAN OF MEN AT PITT

Armbruster and Miss Schewe Get License to Wed Monday in School Romance.

His disciplinary demeanor tempered with romance, Adolph H. Armbruster, acting dean of men at the University of Pittsburgh, appeared Saturday in a new role—that of a happy bridegroom-to-be.

The romantic turn of events came to light with the issuance of a marriage license to Mr. Armbruster and Miss Bertha F. Schewe, young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Schewe, of 835 Anaheim street.

Neither Dean Armbruster nor his future bride could be found. It was understood, however, that their absence or elusiveness was due to the fact that much in the way of preparations remained to be taken care of today. They are to be married Monday, it was understood.

NO SURPRISE CAUSED

Both the dean and Miss Schewe are known to thousands of students and faculty members at Pitt and their sudden decision to embark upon the sea of matrimony was no surprise. In fact, it appears as though the dean had been planning the big event for some time. He probably had it in mind at the close of last semester when he arranged to relinquish his duties as dean of men in the fall to re-enter the school of business administration as an instructor.

News of the budding romance, however, was kept as secret as anything could be on the Pitt campus. Miss Schewe was secretary to Dean L. P. Sieg in the college. The dean's frequent visits to Dean Sieg's office certainly were not necessary to the eradication of a few radicals, one of Dean Armbruster's duties during Pitt's skirmish with its outlawed student organization.

Boys and girls as well as professors naturally began to wonder. Their wonder increased to mild surprise when they learned that Miss Schewe was the object of—well, a few of the calls.

MOTHER ELATED

Then came Saturday and a joint visit to the marriage license office in the City-County Building.

Miss Schewe's mother is elated.

"Adolph is a lovely boy," she said, "and my daughter is happy. The wedding will be a quiet affair—just where, I don't know yet.

"They are going on an automobile trip after the ceremony Monday, and when they return, they will make their home at 6811 Meade street.

"I know they are going to be happy and I give them my blessing," she concluded beamingly.

Dry Operators Raid Grant Street Saloon

In a raid Saturday afternoon at 105 Grant street, prohibition agents reported confiscating a quart of moonshine whisky and arresting Pete Myitrai, 36, and Frank Molmer, 53.

Twenty gallons of whisky were reported seized in a saloon at Twelfth and Ann streets, Homestead. Andrew Lacza, 60, alleged proprietor, was arrested. Mrs. Mary Brouch, 35, alleged owner of a roadhouse on the Freeport road, near Cheswick, was held under $1,000 bond. Nine barrels of beer and 46 pints of whisky were seized.

Discarding Package Causes Booze Arrest

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Mike Balda and Theodore Sidow, both of this place, are under arrest for violation of the liquor law. Patrolmen W. G. McKee and C. L. Stein, of the State Highway Patrol, noticed a small package tossed from the machine occupied by the men as it approached their headlight testing station. A search revealed three additional gallons of moonshine in the machine. Each furnished $1,000 bail for court.

Pittsburgher New Sharon Plant Head

SHARON, Pa., Aug. 3.—Peter Mercer, of Pittsburgh, has been named general superintendent of the Sharon Foundry Company plant at Wheatland, which was recently purchased for $300,000 by the Pittsburgh Steel Foundry Corporation of Glassport. The plant is to be taken over August 12. More than 250 men will be employed. Mr. Mercer will succeed L. A. Way, superintendent for the past three years.

TO MARRY

SECRETARY—Miss Bertha F. Schewe, 835 Anaheim street, secretary to Dean Leo P. Sieg, University of Pittsburgh, who with Acting-Dean of Men Adolph H. Armbruster has taken a license to marry.

176TH RETURNS FROM TRAINING

The One Hundred and Seventy-Sixth Field Artillery, Pittsburgh's only complete regiment of the National Guard, returned home Saturday after a 15-day encampment at Tobyhanna. Upon its arrival at Shadeside station, the regiment, led by Col. W. R. Dunlap, marched to the Logan armory, where a short inspection was held before disbanding.

Battery F brought back for the second year the cup for the best firing record.

Col. Dunlap was loud in his praise of the encampment and the men, many of whom had gained from 5 to 15 pounds in weight.

U. S. Man Held in Art Theft Freed in Spain

EL ESCORIAL, Spain, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Backey J. Dee, American tourist from Chicago, held in jail here since last Wednesday for removing a valuable antique porcelain plaque from the walls of the historic Escorial Palace, was released from custody today.

Judge Canovas Del Castillo, in charge of the case, stated early today he expected to sign a decree releasing Dee on 10,000 peseta bond (about $1,450), providing the Chicago man would not leave Spain but hold himself in readiness for future trial.

3 LEAVING FOR ATLANTA CELLS

Deputy United States Marshal E. A. Holden will leave Monday for the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., with three prisoners, one of them Ferruccio W. Ronchetti, former manager of the foreign department of the First National Bank of Bridgeville. Ronchetti pleaded guilty July 9 to embezzlement of $33,621.65 of the bank's funds and was sentenced three years in the penitentiary by Judge Nelson McVicar. The former banker told the court he lost the money speculating in the stock market.

The other prisoners will be Nick Sigler, of Sharon, Pa., who pleaded guilty to possessing a photographic negative of a $5 Federal Reserve bank note, and Royal S. Harris, who pleaded guilty to falsely representing himself as a deputy collector of internal revenue. Sigler was sentenced to three years and Harris to two years.

Bridgeville Opens 'White Way' Tuesday

Bridgeville will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the invention of the electric light Tuesday night by turning on its new "white way" lighting system. Burgess McCaffrey will throw the switch illuminating the new system, which will be the signal for the start of a parade under the auspices of the Bridgeville Fire Department.

Lucky Buck Raises The Ante on Monday

By LUCKY BUCK

As the Lucky Buck contest of the Sun-Telegraph enters upon its fifth consecutive week, the people of Pittsburgh continue to watch my comings and goings with intense absorption.

Following my announcement Friday that I would have a surprise for my friends and acquaintances today, an unprecedented number of the curious instigated methods of inquiry which have had disastrous effect upon my telephone.

Determined not to fail my public, I make my bow today with the announcement of a special offering which will take effect tomorrow. Instead of passing out five $1 bills, each redeemable for $20 in Monday's paper, I am going to pass out 15 $1 bills in many places of the Pittsburgh district.

Five of these will be redeemable at the Sun-Telegraph for $20 each.

Ten of them will be worth $10 each.

I meant to announce the numbers of these bills in today's paper, but was sidetracked by that absorbing story, "All Quiet on the Western Front." I had saved the Sun-Telegraph for several days and started to catch up with the story a little while ago. And now its too late to write the numbers!

The numbers of these 15 bills will be in Monday's Sun-Telegraph. Five of them have already been spent; I shall spend the other 10 Monday, after the numbers are in the first edition of the Sun-Telegraph.

If "All Quiet on the Western Front" doesn't hold me up some more, I'll be with you tomorrow.

SNOOK WRITING HIS TESTIMONY, RETAINS CALM

Witnesses Tell of Couple Renting Room and Reveal Doctor's Access to Drugs.

"lover's lane" outside the city, he killed her.

Snook also heard Mrs. Margaret Smalley, owner of apartments on Hubbard avenue, testify that he had rented a room from her for Theora, posing at that time as "Howard Snook, salt salesman, of Newark, O." He paid $4 a week for the room which he rented last February, four months before the slaying.

And, on top of that, his former "boss," Dr. Oscar V. Brumley, veterinary professor at Ohio State University, and a member of the faculty for 31 years, took the stand and told how he warned Theora three years ago "not to go out automobile riding with any man in his department." She was at that time Snook's part-time stenographer, and Dr. Brumley had seen her get in Snook's automobile several times.

FINE WITNESS

Chemist Long was an excellent witness for the prosecution. He testified, among other things, that he had found stains caused by human blood on Dr. Snook's coat, automobile, hammer and glove. He also said he found the supposedly sex-exciting drugs in her stomach when he examined a beef sandwich which she had eaten.

Dr. Brumley related that Dr. Snook used samples of drugs, some of which were on the prosecution's table, in his classes, in order to teach students the nature and origin of the drugs. The drugs were found in Snook's office and in his laboratory.

"The drugs were kept under lock and key," Dr. Brumley testified. "Members of the faculty who had work in that particular section had keys to the drug room."

The spectators in the courtroom, mostly young girls and women, craned their necks when Mrs. Smalley told how Snook hired a room in her Hubbard avenue apartments. Mrs. Smalley, attired in a black and white check dress and black hat, shot her answers back rapidly while she was on the stand.

Q.—(By Assistant Prosecutor C. Hicks)—Now, Mrs. Smalley, look at the defendant reclining there. Do you know him—he is Dr. James H. Snook?

A.—I do; I knew him as Mr. Howard Snook; I did not know him as Dr. James Snook.

Q.—When was the first time you met him?

A.—On the eleventh of February, last, when he came to my place to rent a room. He told me he was a salt salesman from Newark, O.; that he demonstrated salts.

Q.—Did he say anything about being married?

A.—He rented the room for him and wife. He agreed to pay $4 a week.

Mrs. Smalley said that Snook asked her to be sure to thoroughly clean the room every Saturday, and that his wife would take care of it during the week.

Q.—Did you ever see the lady who was supposed to be Mrs. Snook?

A.—I saw her once. I met her in the hall one morning. It was a Saturday.

On cross examination, Mrs. Smalley testified that Snook and Miss Hix were "nice people." She never saw any liquor in their room, even though she looked for it. She "never found anything out of the ordinary."

Miss Hix told her, she said, that she was "Mrs. Snook." She testified that Theora was "neatly dressed" on the occasion she met her and that "she looked so much like a good woman I noticed her." Theora reminded her of a country girl because she was quiet and "did not wear her skirts short."

Mrs. Smalley also told of identifying Miss Hix at the morgue as the girl who had occupied the room and of having later identified Dr. Snook as the man who had accompanied her to the room on numerous occasions.

vived and was taken home by a Polish naval vessel.

Minor adjustments have been made to the French plane, among them the addition of another gasoline tank and the replacement of the tail stabilizers with larger fins. These adjustments, according to Costes, are results of his experience in the first flight.

"The weather reports are fine" Costes said tonight. "There are several areas of depression around the Azores and between the Azores and America, but we intend to avoid them by taking the Great Circle course.

"We wasted fuel last time making for the Azores. This time we intend to avoid the islands, and keep in touch by wireless with trans-Atlantic ships, thus checking out position.

"Our radio has a powerful transmitter and receiver and we should not be out of touch with shore stations except when in mid-Atlantic.

"We are not intending to follow the shipping lanes, and not entirely the Great Circle route. We shall hop directly for the northwestern tip of Spain and then make our way in the shortest direct route toward New York. We hope to do the 3,500 miles to New York in a few hours over the time it took Lindbergh.

"There is always the possibility that we may turn back to France again too. We are not going to risk everything thinking we can fight it out against too large storms. We are certain to run into some, and we have learned from our last experience that the elements are nothing to trifle with."

Costes gained world fame when with Commander Joseph Lebrix, he flew around the world in 1928, crossing the Atlantic from Paris to Port Natal, Brazil, with one stop in Africa.

MOTHERS' FUND HERE RELIEVED BY REMARRIAGE

Despite Families of Widows Becoming Self-Supporting, Number Waiting Aid Gains.

Wedding bells added romance to the otherwise cold list of statistics in the report of the Allegheny County Mothers' Assistance Fund trustees for August 1. While there is a constant increase in the number of families requiring aid, it was shown that 153 families during the year became self-supporting or widows re-married.

Dan Cupid, however, is not keeping the wolf from the door in proportion to the number of homes that are left fatherless, and children are of slow growth when the widowed mother looks forward to the day they become old enough to assist in the burden of home-making.

WAITING LIST GAINS

During the year there were 544 new applications and on August 1 the number of eligible families on the waiting list was 261. The records show that the waiting list has increased 43 families since the beginnng of the fiscal year June 1.

Interest is attached to the current report on account of the reduction of the county budget for mothers' assistance which impends since the legislature at its recent session failed to grant an increased appropriation for the state's widows and their families. For 1928-1929 the Allegheny County board had a budget of $448,000. Under the new allocation the 1929-1930 budget has been reduced to $421,252, and in face of this the number of new applicants is increasing.

BUDGET HERE REDUCED

Under the reduced budget, the Allegheny County board is caring for 824 families. This includes 230 families granted aid during the last year. At the same time, investigations were held in 7,201 cases and family visits by the board's workrs numbered 10,068.

While the budgets of the mothers' assistance fund have been reduced in Philadelphia, Allegheny and other larger counties, there has been an increase under the new allocation plan in Cambria, Fayette and other industrial centers, and throughout the state there is a division of the fund based on the need rather than on a ratio of population. It is pointed out that the new system would work a benefit to the larger counties as well if an adequate appropriation were granted, and to this end friends of the mothers' pension plan here are urging a biennial appropriation of $3,500,000 or more.

Pittsburgh Enters U. S. Beauty Contest For Miss America

Pittsburgh's candidate for the National Beauty Pageant in Baltimore, September 2, for the selection of "Miss America" of 1929, will be chosen at a series of elimination contests to be held in Palm Garden Park beginning August 15.

Unmarried women between 16 and 25 are eligible, according to Johnny Jones, local dance promoter, conducting the contest here. "Miss Pittsburgh" and an alternate will be given a free trip to Baltimore during the beauty pageant.

peace emotion, has stopped building cruisers, although England has twice as many fast cruisers as we have.

JAPAN HAS NOT STOPPED BUILDING.

That country has a policy. This country needs a policy.

THE Boeing Airplane factory here, is one of the most useful institutions in the country. It builds swift pursuit planes for the navy, is building a dozen planes to carry 18 passengers each; its constant experimenting improves the product.

BUT, in the long rows of 1,500 skilled mechanics turning out work that requires precision, concentration and pride, good craftsmanship—you find no native born Americans.

There are Norwegians, Swedes, Scotchmen, Englishmen, Belgians, Frenchmen that work. None American born.

THE American boy has a foolish idea that our hands were made not to be used. His father and mother often encourage his folly. These mechanics in the airplane factory earn far more than the average white-collared young gentleman, devoting his high school or college education to some clerical job.

YOUNG Americans ought to know that their hands were made for use, that mechanical skill is a great honor and a great education.

Our hands have been educated by our brains. Our brains also have been educated by our hands.

A MILLION fathers and mothers in this country wondering what to do with their boys couldn't do better than have them learn a trade and acquire mechanical skill.

That, and nothing else, will make them independent as long as they live. Tools and real work never will go out of fashion.

TWO SOUTH SEA EXPLORERS DIE ON SAVAGE ISLE

U. S. and Paris Men Victims After Vanishing on Trip To Study Primitive Folk.

CRISTOBAL, Panama Canal Zone, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—News of the death of two members of the Austral scientific expedition in the South Sea Islands was received here today with the arrival of Gustav Davidson, leader of the expedition, from Tahiti, Oceania.

The victims were William B. Hargrave, of Colfax, Wash., and Phineas E. Haskevitch, of Paris. They left the island of Raivavae, in a native catamaran last April and disappeared. Search for them failed to reveal any trace.

The expedition left New York on May 19, 1928, to explore and conduct scientific research in the islands of the South Seas.

Davidson, who is a Columbia University man and holder of two degrees from that college, lived at 128 West Ninety-third street, New York City, before he left upon the expedition.

He explained that he and fellow scientists had long been interested in living conditions in the Austral Island group and the natives of that isolated region, which is so rarely visited by white men.

It was the intention of the scientists, making up the expedition, to study the language of the natives and their biological history to determine their origin and their possible relationship with the primitive people of the Oriental mainland.

The Austral Island group lies about 600 miles south of Tahiti. Davidson expected to use material from the trip for a book which was to be an addition to a number of other books on travel and adventure he has written.

Dry-Sentence Threat Still Faces Mother-to-Be

CHARGES NOT DISMISSED IN LIQUOR ACTION

Prosecutor May Have Case Removed From Calendar Until After Babe's Birth.

Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 3.—Mrs. Thelma Holland today faced the possibility of the state keeping a far-fetched liquor charge dangling over her head until after she has had her baby.

Daniel Beecher, chief trial deputy in the office of District Attorney Buron Fitts, this morning indicated by inference that he had decided not to recommend dismissal of liquor charges against Mrs. Holland, an expectant mother.

But with his intimation that he would not dismiss the charge Beecher added the suggestion that he might move to have the case taken "off calendar" until after her baby has been born. That means that the charge will lie dormant—not dead—until early next year.

PREFERS QUICK TRIAL

"It doesn't seem reasonable to me," said her attorney, Moses C. Davis, today. "I feel that we should have the trial at once and be done with it. Mrs. Holland has a right to have this thing settled, rather than have it hanging over her head in her present condition. I feel now that I would oppose any move to mark the case off the calendar for months, and would insist on having the trial held on August 9, as now set."

There had been talk of dismissing the charge against Thelma late Friday. Beecher had been visited by Davis, who pointed out his own belief that the state had not sufficient evidence to warrant trying Mrs. Holland.

Davis held that the evidence only showed that Mrs. Holland continued to live with her husband in the house where he maintained the still. She played no active part of any nature in his liquor activities. It was not reasonable, he argued, to suppose that a wife in love with her husband would desert that husband or "turn him in" to the police because he was making liquor.

ALL DEPENDS ON HER

Her husband, Davis pointed out, has already accepted all guilt in the still case, and is even now serving a maximum term in Folsom Prison. That leaves his six children for Mrs. Holland to care for—in addition to herself and the child that is to be born to her. Why add to that punishment the further ordeal of a court trial in her present condition, on obviously weak charges, Davis argued.

Beecher studied the case overnight.

Meantime, there voluntarily appeared before him Miss Florence Woodhead, deputy district attorney, who already has thrust herself into the case by digging up non-pertinent stories about Mrs. Holland's past life.

"Miss Woodhead laid before me certain reports tending to show that Thelma and Holland might have known each other before his former wife died, and certain other matters," Beecher admitted today. "But nevertheless, her report—even if the matters therein are true—would have nothing to do with the present charge against Mrs. Holland. If we bring Mrs. Holland to trial, it will be only on the charge that she possessed the still for which her husband is already serving time."

CALLS WITNESSES

Beecher, declining to state definitely that he had decided not to recommend dismissal of the charge, nevertheless ordered subpenaes issued for several state witnesses to appear before JJudge Marshall McComb next Friday, when the trial of Mrs. Holland is scheduled to open.

JJudge Emmett Wilson started all the protest in the Holland case by imposing the maximum sentence after Mrs. Holland had pleaded guilty in expectation of the probation that had been recommended for her.

Judge Wilson did not put in an appearance at the hall of justice today. After his original sentence had outraged public opinion, Judge Wilson eventually reversed himself, set aside the judgment, allowed the woman to plead not guilty and get a new trial—and then washed his hands of the case.

"BUNK"

But Miss Woodhead went to him with her story of Thelma's past. For a while Judge Wilson was threatening to order a new inquiry. But apparently he has changed his mind and let the case drop entirely as far as he is concerned. The new investigation he threatened has not been ordered.

"All this talk about Thelma Holland having come between Holland and his first wife is bunk—absolute bunk," commented her lawyer, Davis, today. "I have talked with her and am prepared to state that there is no truth in that story. When we are faced with those accusations—although they have no part in the charges against her—we will be ready to meet them."

NO AIR LICENSE, PILOT ARRESTED

HARRISBURG, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The State Aeronautics Commission announced today that the first arrest for violation of the new aviation laws was made last night in Greenville, Mercer County. Arthur Jones, of Youngstown, O., operating from the Hoch-Mitchell Field, Greenville, was arrested on charges of flying without a Pennsylvania pilot's license and a state commercial license, showing the plane to have been approved for safety features.

He was released in $500 bail after pleading guilty before an alderman. The information was made by Lorin C. Faurot, aircraft inspector.

The aeronoutics commission has instructed its three inspectors to make a survey of the state, checking up on all pilots and planes and to report those operating without permits. The state highway patrol will also visit all airports and landing fields to aid in enforcement of the aviation laws adopted by the 1929 Legislature.

U.S. Navy Balloon Is Downed by Fog

LEWISTOWN, Pa., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Two naval officers attached to Brown Field, Quantico Marine base, Quantico, Va., landed at McVeytown, near here, early today in a United States naval observation balloon following a test flight that ended when fog and poor visibility caused them to descend.

The officers deflated the big bag on a farm near McVeytown, 12 miles from here, and immediately left by train for Qautnico. The balloon was not damaged in landing and was shipped back to Brown Field.

The balloonists left Brown Field at 5:45 p. m. Friday evening.

RECORD PLANE COMING HERE

The St. Louis Robin, airplane in which the endurance flight record was recently made, is to be brought to Pittsburgh for a refueling exhibition, it was learned Saturday.

Hal Bazley, of the Curtiss Flying Service, and the Pierpont Motor Company, dealers in Curtiss airplanes, are arranging for the demonstration. It will be one of a series of exhibitions, and Pittsburgh probably will be the first city to be visited. It is expected that Red Jackson will pilot the Robin on its flight here, and be at the controls during the demonstration.

VETS SUE U.S. FOR INSURANCE

Three veterans of the World War filed suits Saturday in Federal Court against the government in which they seek to recover various sums on war risk insurance policies, because of being incapacitated while in service. They were Thomas Joseph Flynn, of 513 Fifth street, Braddock; Darwin Miller Stivanson, of 273 Dwight street, Kittanning, and Herbert Griffith, of Cherry Tree, Pa.

Griffith asks for judgment in the sum of $7,187.50 on a $10,000 policy; Stivanson $7,015 on a $10,000 policy, and Flynn $3,421.25 on a $5,000 policy. Each of the former soldiers say in their statements of claims that they have been totally and permanently disabled since service in the World War and unable to earn livelihoods.

Judge R. M. Gibson directed the clerk of court to accept and file the suits without payment of costs. They also seek interest on the sums sought and an allowance for the expense of medical examinations. Griffith averred he has been disabled since January 31, 1919; Flynn from August 6, 1919, and Stivanson since May 4, 1919.

North Side District To Picnic Wednesday

A community outing for the residents of the Manchester district will be held at West View Park Wednesday afternoon and evening under the auspices of the North Side Board of Trade. This will be the nineteenth annual outing sponsored by the Board of Trade. Three thousand gift bags for the children, 600 dozen of weiners and 1,000 gallons of buttermilk are to be distributed free. A watermelon guessing contest and a baby show will feature the program. William A. Doench is chairman of the committee in charge.

Thieves Loot W. Va. Legislator's Home

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Jewelry worth $3,000 was stolen early today from the home of Raymond L. Beuhring, Huntington attorney and Cabell County delegate in the lower house of the State Legislature. The house was entered while members of the Beuhring family were escorting visitors to their homes. Entrance was gained by cutting a screen door. Included in the loot were two diamond rings valued at $1,000 each. Police reported no trace had been found of the burglars.

Donora Has Plans For Bigger Harbor

DONORA, Pa., Aug. 3.—The American Steel and Wire Company is seeking War Department approval for enlargement of its harbor on the Monongahela River here. The enlargement of the harbor is made necessary by increased use of the river for shipments of raw materials and finished steel products.

14TH WARD VOTE ROW UP MONDAY

A factional political row in the Fourteenth Ward between Alderman Sol S. Goldstein and Edward D. Friebertshauser, ward chairman, is expected to receive but little sympathy from Judge Frank P. Patterson when the controversy over making additional election precincts in the ward comes before him for a final hearing Monday morning. The judge has indicated that where there are more than 250 votes in a precinct the citizens have the right to ask that the district be divided, as a matter of convenience to the voters.

The plea of Acting Chief Clerk James Routley, of the County Commissioners' office, that to change the precincts now, only seven weeks before the September primary, would entail $20,000 expense for reletting of the printing contract for the tally sheets apparently did not impress him. He observed that the five necessary sheets could be changed with pen and ink by clerks in the Commissioners' office.

The case was first heard last Thursday, and ended in a near fist fight between the factionists.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—As result of what police termed an experiment to see if a wood alcohol anti-freeze solution for automobile radiators was drinkable, Angus MacPherson and Edward Dean, both of this city, were dead here today. MacPherson died at his home, while Dean's body was found near Oak Grove Cemetery.

Railroad Mail Pouch Theft Suspect Held

WILLIAMSON, W. Va., Aug 3.—(AP.)—Lawrence Pitts, of Iaeger, was held for action of the federal grand jury today in connection with the theft of a mail pouch containing $600. The broken pouch, with the money removed, it was testified, was found in a freight train in which Pitts was alleged to have leaned out and grabbed the pouch as the train passed a mail rack.

HOSPITAL PICKS NEW FUND SITE

Headquarters for the Belvedere General Hospital's $50,000 expansion fund drive will be transferred tomorrow into larger quarters in the Investment Building, in which the offices for the campaign have been established during the week since it was begun.

Seven telephones and a like number of operators will be installed in the new offices at 1001 and 1010 in the building, which is in Fourth avenue. The move into larger quarters was made necessary by the success of the drive heretofore and the great number of persons visiting the headquarters to aid the hospital, those in charge say.

Workers in the drive, which was begun to increase the now inadequate bed-space in the Paulson avenue institution, will make their first report at a meeting next Saturday.

New Brighton War Vet Dies

NEW BRIGHTON, Pa., Aug. 3.—Thomas W. Anderson, 85, veteran of the Civil War, is dead at his home. He was a carpenter. He leaves his widow, Mrs. H. Viola Anderson; four sons, Ross, of Pittsburgh, and Harragh, David and Joseph, New Brighton, and five daughters, Mrs. Mollie West, Mrs. Ida Sykes, Mrs. Katherine Seniors and Mrs. Lydia Blount, all of New Brighton, and Mrs. George Winters, of Beaver.

BIGAMY CHARGE IN ANNULMENT

Charging that her husband neglected to tell her that he had another wife, Mrs. Sarah Ann Barcley MacNichols, 7607 Bennett street, filed a suit for annulment of her marriage to Arthur W. MacNichols, 7231 Hermitage street, in Common Pleas Court Saturday. She says she lived with her husband from June 18 to July 3, when she discovered his previous marriage to Anna MacNichols, whom he married 15 years ago, and whom he has not divorced, the suit declares.

N. J. Governor Calls Assembly Meeting

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—A special meeting of the New Jersey State Legislature for Monday, August 12, was called today by Gov. Morgan F. Larson. The session is expected to repeal or amend the Wise law, which canceled existing contracts with the public utilities use of the state's bridges so as to permit them to use the bridges without payment.

TWINS PERILED AS HOME FAILS TO GET CASH AID

Roselia Asylum Refused State Help; Nuns Plan To Carry on Good Work.

Edward and John, twins, came into the world during a rushing week-end. For them, perhaps, a bleak one.

While much of the world enjoyed July weather; while the city and county parks were jammed with playing children and merry parents, these two fragile little fellows appeared at Roselia Foundling Asylum, Cliff street.

In a manner not uncommon to babies, it is reliably reported that they yelled as justily as little four or five pounders can at their debut on a strange stage. But they didn't know what sort of a world they were coming ino, and interested observers are holding from them the truth.

MANY HANDICAPS

For the pair of boys, miniature in size, delicate of constitution, are facing as many handicaps as it is possible for babies to meet.

They are fatherless.

Their mother is poverty-stricken, just a slip of a thing from a mountain town who supported her widowed mother's brood until her misfortune drove her to Pittsburgh and into the arms of the kindly nuns.

And last, the hospital that is homing them in the name of charity, is facing the acute problem of closing its doors, of shutting off the beneficence that has marked it since back in the last century. For Roselia, as well as the twins, is feeling the pinch of poverty.

Because the foundling home is operated by nuns, because these nuns had a chapel in the convent the state officials decided that the institution was sectarian and that the 100 or more foundling babes that are always being mothered there couldn't get the $50,000 appropriation that the state formerly gave.

MOVE UNAVAILING

The Sisters moved the chapel out in the hope that Gov. Fisher would suspend signature on the bill rejecting the expenditure, at least until the Supreme Court of the state ruled that it was right or wrong. But it availed little.

The state sent "visitors" to the institution to "investigate." They saw the chapel and the black-frocked, silent nuns. They didn't see the blue-coat on his rounds picking up slips of girls, only to send them to Roselia; they didn't see the foundlings left in ash cans, railroad stations, theaters, alleyways, tenderly cared for, many brought to health and strength through almost superhuman attention and efforts at the asylum; maybe they saw, maybe they didn't the little Negro children and certainly they never heard the sisters ask a mother or a foundling when admitted what religion they espoused, and on learning, hung up a "No admittance sign." That is not in the record.

But the nuns are not complaining. Although they admit that they are pinched badly; that the institution is suffering from lack of funds more than ever in its history; that the Rose Day benefit in the spring brought little response from the Pittsburgh people, they blamed no one.

PLAN TO CARRY ON

"We'll keep open somehow," one said hopefully. "We've never had an easy road. I'm sorry that we haven't more for the children. We need little but the babies we get here—97 now—seven came last Sunday—haven't any powerful friends. They haven't any friends. If they had they would never have to ask us for things. I'm sure the people of the city don't know what the babies need or they would give it to them."

Edward and John, twins, may some day be up for adoption. But that cannot be determined yet. The mother will have no means, no hopes of caring for them. But until they are old enough the Sisters will keep them at Roselia. Their policy is to keep the children with their mothers, only in the last extremity offering them for adoption.

The institution is an independent one, managed by a board of directors whose membership includes several denominations.

P. and W. Va. Route Touches Scottdale

SCOTTDALE, Pa., Aug. 3.—The Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railroad will connect with Scottdale in the near future, according to plans announced.

The railroad already has acquired a right-of-way and has leased and opened offices in Scottdale. Plans call for the first train to run into Scottdale by February 1. This gives Scottdale three railways, the Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio and the P. & W. Va.

NEW RUM RING OPENING DRIVE ON GREAT LAKES

Canadian Liquor Smugglers Resume Work With Faster Boats to Offset Blockade.

WINDSOR, Ont., Aug. 3.—(Canadian Press.)—Detroit interests are behind new rum running syndicates which contemplate operations around the northeastern end of Lake Ontario with headquarters at Kingston, according to claims of under cover agents of the United States prohibition enforcement department.

There is a further report that a new fleet of boats is to be placed in service by the Lake Ontario rum runners. The new craft, it is said, are of greater capacity than the usual rum boats and of greater speed.

Many of the rum runners took a vacation the past month after the blockade of the United States "dry" navy had become remarkably efficient along the Detroit River. They left for Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie and Lake Huron, and the Detroit River trade fell away to practically nothing.

LIQUOR TIDE HIGH

But there is a general movement now all along the line, a checkup of the liquor business here has revealed. Much liquor is being run across the boundary line from nearly every export dock from Sault Ste. Marie to the eastern end of Lake Ontario and the recent transfer of coastguard cutters to the Buffalo Lake sectors has eased things up considerably in the immediate Detroit River area. There has been much activity of rum boats up and down the river in the past few days as the smugglers evidently were taking advantage of increasing activity on other fronts.

RUM EXPORTERS BUSY

FORT ERIE, Ont., Aug. 3.—(Canadian Press).—Despite statements by W. Rasmussen, commander of the Buffalo division of the coast guard patrol, that a more vigorous campaign against rum runners would be instituted immediately on the Niagara River, business around the export docks here was activo yesterday.

A constant stream of liquor trucks rumbled into the docks with cases being piled high on the wharves, while across the river several Coast Guard boats lay at their docks watching the operations of the runners and occasionally making a trip up and down the river.

Reinforced by runners driven from the Detroit area, a rum running offensive is being planned here and indications point to it being the most extensive campaign of the season.

Mt. Lebanon Realty Suit Seeking $2,051 Monthly Commission

Claiming payments due him of $2,051 monthly, H. J. Crawford entered an action in equity in Common Pleas Court Saturday against the Mt. Lebanon Real Estate Company, asking for an accounting of commissions he says are due him in connection with the sale of building lots in a 350-acre tract on the Washington road, Bethel Township. He says there is due the defendant company monthly payments totaling $28,564, from which he should receive his commission. His claim is based on an assignment to him by the City Builders' Corporation of money due that company under an agreement between it and the Mt. Lebanon Real Estate Company.

SOVIET-BRITISH SPLIT TRIVIAL

LONDON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The hitch in the British-Russian negotiations for resumption of diplomatic relations was said in official quarters today to have arisen over the question of procedure and not policy.

Rumors that the departure of M. Doygalevksy, Russian ambassador in Paris and Russian representative in the negotiations, was connected with unpleasantness in his discussions with Foreign Secretary Henderson were denied emphatically.

Misunderstanding as to the nature and scope of the initial conference is believed in informed circles to have been the cause for suspension of the discussions. It is known that the questions of propaganda and Russian debts were not broached.

The next move in the effort to renew normal relations between the countries is expected to come from Moscow.

Spaniards to Erect Monument on Spot Yellow Bird Landed

SANTANDER, Spain, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The Spanish aces, Capts. Jimenez and Iglesias, who flew recently from Spain to South America, will assist Sunday in the ceremony of laying the foundation for a monument commemorating the landing of the French trans-Atlantic plane Yellow Bird at Comillas.

The monument has been financed by popular subscription and will be located on Oiambre beach, near the little town, famous as a resort of royalty. High Spanish dignitaries will assist in the ceremonies.

The Yellow Bird was that which set out from Old Orchard, Me., and alighted at Comillas. It was manned by Jean Assolant, Rene LeFevre and Almeno Lotti.

Corry Show Robbery Record Discovered

SHARPSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—It was 30 years ago that bold bandits held up and robbed the Sells-Forepaugh circus at Corry and carried off the gate receipts and several valuables. The show later moved to Sharon. Postmaster Franklin Clary recently uncovered clippings of newspapers in which the story of the robbery was carried.

RED MEN PLAN 2-DAY OUTING

Members of the Improved Order of Red Men from all parts of Pennsylvania will attend an outing to be held at New Shady Grove Park near Uniontown, next Saturday and Sunday, under the auspices of Uniontown members of the organization. Special trains will be run from Philadelphia and members will be picked up at various points along the way. Others will travel by automobile.

Saturday morning the chiefs of the various camps will be welcomed as they arrive at the park and the afternoon will be given over to Indian games. A band concert also will be given by the Uniontown High School bands. Saturday night there will be a parade in Uniontown, the delegates returning to the park where camp will be made for the night. Sunday morning trips will be made to historical spots nearby with band concerts and speaking Sunday afternoon.

Prosecutor in Fayette County Rum Murder Ends Life

RUM, POLITICAL INQUIRY PUSHED BY MAJ. ADAMS

District Attorney Confers With State Police Head; Kills Himself Soon After.

working on the slaying of Donohoe, himself a former member of the constabulary. Rosenberg attended the conference, held in his official offices in the courthouse. He left at 2 o'clock.

AID DISCOVERS BODY

An hour later Assistant District Attorney William Parshall went to Rosenberg's private office in the Cray building to discuss a pending case. He pushed open the door.

Rosenberg's body lay crumpled behind his desk. His hat lay upon a filing case. At his inert feet lay a section of dental bridgework, jarred from his mouth.

There was a pool of blood beneath his head, and from his hand dangled the pistol. Coroner Baltz's investigation later revealed that there were powder burns on Rosenberg's head, and that the pistol was his own.

It was the coroner's opinion that Rosenberg had shot himself immediately after the conference with Maj. Adams. He had been dead an hour.

Mrs. Edith Benson, elevator operator in the building, was in the first floor hallway when she heard a muffled report.

"That was a shot," she said to her step-daughter, Mrs. Charles Whetsel, of Waltersburg, who was with her.

"Oh, that was just a blowout," was Mrs. Whetsel's opinion.

"But I knew it was a shot," Mrs. Benson told the coroner.

Hundreds gathered in front of the Cray Building, with tense faces. The entire county had been stirred by the Donohoe slaying, and the death of Rosenberg left it, in the coroner's phrase, "stunned."

TWO MEN AFTER ROSENBERG

There was a belief that Rosenberg too, had been slain, and Mrs. Benson's story seemed to support this. Shortly before she heard the shot two men entered the building and asked for Rosenberg, she said. She did not know whether they went to his office or not.

Coroner Baltz was so certain Rosenberg's death was suicide that the appearance of these visitors was not regarded as of importance.

The prosecutor's father, Alex Rosenberg, it is reported, killed himself .5 years ago at Uniontown.

District Attorney Rosenberg, 41, was born and raised in the Uniontown district. He graduated from the Uniontown High School in 1907. He was a graduate of Bucknell University and the University of Pittsburgh. He was admitted to the bar in 1913.

After serving as assistant district attorney under William A. Miller for four years he became district attorney in January, 1928. Rosenberg leaves his widow, formerly Miss Etta Hazin, of Pittsburgh, and three children, Diana, 8; Joan, 5, and Ann, 13 months, survive. He also has a brother, Louis Rosenberg, proprietor of a Uniontown restaurant, and a sister in Chicago.

State troopers have been working since Wednesday, when Donohoe was slain, to track down the killers, and their investigation has brought into the open many whispered rumors of graft and corrupt politics.

When County Detective Downing began his inquiry, the scene was his office in the courthouse. Rosenberg was among the inquisitors.

After the state police homicide squad entered the case, the inquisition was transferred to the barracks at New Salem. Rosenberg remained in Uniontown. The grilling of the suspects was done almost entirely by state police.

PIN FAITH ON JUDGE

The non-political, civic-minded people of this community were watching the activities of Judge S. John Morrow. Of all the officials in the county, he was regarded as the man most likely to find a remedy for the situation which produced the Donohoe slaying.

It was Judge Morrow who questioned Wonsetter, former fugitive from justice and convicted bootlegger, who was brought here yesterday after state police had trailed him to Philipsburg, Pa.

THIRD DEGREE LIFTED

"Big Ed" talked freely, it was reported, but threw no light directly on the Donohoe affair. He did tell much of bootlegging in Fayette County and its connections with men sworn to suppress it, investigators said.

Wonsetler pleaded absolute innocence about the killing. The former circus "front man" and side show producer declared that he and the dead man were friends and he would be the last man in the world to want to see Donohoe dead.

As to his liquor activities, Wonsetler said he paid out $100 a week the first four weeks he was in business in the Reilley Garage, almost adjacent to his home. After that time business was not so good and the man he was paying for a "protection," which didn't exist, demanded that he be taken into the business, he revealed.

"SEVEN-YEAR" THREAT

Later when he fled the county after District Attorney Rosenberg secured an indictment against him on a conspiracy charge, this same man met him in Bellaire, O., and told him if he ever came back to Fayette County he would get seven years. Despite this fact, Wonsetler, his sourse of income cut off and apparently not flush with ready money, seemed glad to get back to the soil he had known as home for the past 20 years.

Hearing that the authorities believed he could shed some possible light on the killing, or at least, give them leads, Joe Petrello, well known war veteran, hailed by his friends as "Little Joe," came to town Friday evening. He was interviewed by both County Detective A. A. Downing and Corporal J. R. Dodson and afterwards held at the police station. "Little Joe" could shed but little light on the situation. He knew of no enemies Donohoe had.

SUSPECT

"Glen Allum is held as a material witness," stated Major Adams, but beyond that would go no further. State police, who have Allum in custody, are taking plenty of time before completing their investigation of the young man. Allum was last seen in the Fayette County court house as a participant in the big Pittsburgh road still case. He was tried before Judge Hudson. He has been making his headquarters largely in Washington and Greene Counties but since Wonsetler's flight to other parts he has been quartering frequently at the Wonsetter home in South Uniontownship, it is said.

The intensive grilling of suspects was given up when Judge Morrow ordered three men and two women held for questioning given food and rest, which they had not had for three days. Judge Morrow apparently preferred a less spectacular but more thorough inquiry.

LEFT $10,000 ESTATE

At the time he was "taken for a ride" Donohoe possessed an estate of $10,000, it was attested today when an appraisement of the estate was made. For the most part the estate consists of cash in a local bank, stocks and bonds. The Uniontown National Bank and Trust Company filed a $20,000 bond as administrator of the estate. No will was left by the slain man, and the distribution of his estate probably will be made to one brother, James Donohoe, of Atlantic City; three sisters, Mrs. Ross Ann Smith, of Ireland; Mrs. Catherine Reilly, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Margaret Bell, of Philadelphia, and his father, Patrick Donohoe, of Ireland.

POLICE IN DARK ON DICE HOLDUP

"Well, they're we was, 40 of us, and in comes these four guys with gats in their mitts.

"'Put 'em up,' says they, and 'put 'em up' we did. Then they goes through us. They take all the green we got, and the rocks on some o' the boys.

"It was all very respectable so far, but then they tell us to take off our clothes so we can't follow 'em. Well, we all did and while we're standing there dressed in smiles these four babies beat it."

Perhaps it's true, perhaps it isn't.. It's supposed to be the story of the holdup of a crap game in a shed at the foot of Twentieth street in the Strip produce yards Friday.

Produce men and politicians, including Luke Sullivan, were supposed to have been among the victims. They say the loot was $20,000. The police say they know nothing of it.

Peru to Settle Border Dispute

LIMA, Peru, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—President Leguia, who played a leading part in bringing about a settlement of the old dispute with Chile over Tacna and Arica, said today that Peru was prepared to settle its boundary dispute with Ecuador in the same peaceful way. He pointed out that the frontiers had also been peacefully established with Brazil and Colombia.

He felt that it was first necessary to discuss with Ecuador the problem and establish on which points there were discrepancies before submitting matters to arbitration under the protocol signed at Washington. He declared that Peru would then be willing to comply with the arbitration award.

'Flax Scutching' For Stahlstown

GREENSBURG, Pa., Aug. 3.—Stahlstown will be the scene of an old-time "flax scutching" about September 15.

The scutching will take place in the old grove at Stahlstown and a few of the old-time expert flax scutchers from the Ligonier Valley will participate. The flax will be broken, hacked, scutched and spun on implements some of which are more than a hundred years old.

CORNELL BOYS DO HOTEL WORK

College life is not all rah-rahs and frat parties, four Cornell University students discovered here today. The students are shoveling ashes, mopping floors and doing almost every kind of work from that of a chambermaid to a private secretary. This work, they say, is far from their idea of fun.

Back home in Wapakoneta, O.; Lima, O.; Detroit and Indianapolis, you'll hear friends say Charles Brown, Robert Timmerman, Roland Davis and James A. Morrison are studying hotel management at Cornell. It sounds like sports clothes and auto rides.

They are studying at Cornell, but part of the four-year course compels them to put in 12 weeks for three summers at actual work in hotels. So this quartet is "at home" this summer in the William Penn and Fort Pitt hotels where their duties vary every two weeks. It's actually rough work and overalls for them.

Different from work assigned to them in the average hotel, Eugene C. Eppley, president of the Eppley hotels and one of the sponsors of the Cornell course, believes their experience should include everything. They are moved from one department to another in work that includes firing furnaces, engine room duties, kitchen routines from washing dishes to assisting the steward prepare menus, scrubbing floors, making beds and office work from running errands to serving as room clerks.

Out of each week, averaging eight-hour days, the students receive two hours of credits. Brown and Timmerman are juniors, the other two are seniors. A monthly pay check lightens their tasks, however.

Gas Manager's Field Extended

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—J. Hall Spear, manager of the Connellsville district for the Fayette County Gas Company, has been placed in charge of the larger region embracing this city, Scottdale, Mount Pleasant and Youngwood. He will maintain his headquarters here.

DOPE ADDICT SEGREGATION TO BE PUSHED

Drug Users Primarily Responsible for Prison Uprising, Report Says.

By WILLIAM S. NEAL, International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Legislation providing for removal of all narcotic addicts from the present federal prisons to special institutions will be proposed in a sweeping reorganization of the federal prison system as an aftermath of the Leavenworth riot.

With reports to Sanford Bates, superintendent of federal prisons, indicating that "dope" addicts whose already shaken nervous systems were demoralized by extreme heat were primarily responsible for the riot, backers of the separation movement planned to carry on their campaign in Congress with renewed energy.

Although Congress has authorized the building of two "dope farms," these will be insufficient to relieve the already overcrowded federal prisons of all of the drug addicts, it was said by prison officials. It has been estimated that 30 per cent of the 8,475 prisoners in the three largest federal prisons are victims of the drug habit.

LEGISLATION PREPARED

Legislation is already being prepared by the Department of Justice for presentation to Congress in December to relieve overcrowding, not only in the prisons, but in jails which temporarily house federal prisoners.

Building of new "dope farms," new prisons, extension of the probation system, and establishment of further industries to provide work for convicts may be proposed.

The reorganization plan is being undertaken, it is understood, with the full approval of President Hoover, who selected Bates as an outstanding criminologist to supervise all of the federal institutions for criminals.

In his comment on the Leavenworth demonstration, Bates made an appeal for public support for the campaign to end over-crowding.

Although a special congressional investigating committee last winter reported that it had found deplorable conditions in the federal prisons, no steps were taken to correct the evils. After the report was made the judiciary committee and the investigating committee each claimed that it was the other's job to prepare legislation.

PRISONS OVERCROWDED

Figures of the Bureaus of Prisons, made public today, showed that approximately 8,475 prisoners are confined in three prisons designed to hold 4,737 prisoners, with the prison population growing at a rapid rate.

The Atlanta Federal Prison has 3,780 prisoners with a normal capacity of 1,712; Leavenworth has 3,770 with a normal capacity of about 2,000, and McNeill Island has about 925 prisoners and could house 100 more. The United States Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, O., and the Women's Prison at Alderson, W. Va., are rapidly filling up.

Doubling up of prisoners in one cell, sleeping in dark and ill-ventilated basements and corridors, and improvised dormitories all have resulted from overcrowding, according to the report of the House Committee.

Federal prison officials admit the possibility of further outbreaks until conditions are remedied.

DISEASE RISKS LESS IF PEACE COMES IN EAST

Health Officials Admit They Feared Epidemic Throughout Manchuria.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The lessening of tension in the Chinese - Russian situation has prompted expressions of relief among health officials here, who disclosed today that they had been apprehensive lest massing of large armies in that part of the world result in heavy loss of life from disease.

Recalling that the United States in every war except the last had lost more men from disease than from gunfire, Surgeon Gen. Cumming, of the Public Health Service, said that at the time the Chinese-Russian relations became strained he had feared that history might repeat itself in this respect as such a situation almost unavoidably is reflected throughout the world through the spread of contagion and in numerous less clear cut ways.

COMBAT DISEASE

In a report which has just reached Washington, Dr. Wu Lein Teh, director and chief medical officer of the North Manchuria plague prevention service, told of the adoption at a meeting last February of resolutions which he hoped "may serve as the foundation stone of a systematic and practical health policy to be adopted."

Cerebro-spinal meningitis has been unusually prevalent in Northern China and his report said it had appeared in most northern hospitals, including Peiping, Tientsin, Newchwant and Mukden. He added that the peak of the outbreak apparently was passed in March.

But the Public Health Service was notified only this week that a steamer from Shanghai and the Philippine Islands brought five positive and 23 suspected victims of the disease, which has been found to be particularly virulent and quick to spread under conditions of crowding — as happened in the United States World War camps.

Another report to the health service told of the appearance of pneumonic plague, or human bubonic plague, in a new focal point of North China.

RUSSIANS EQUIPPED

It was said unofficially in other circles that Russian troops are well equipped, with medical and sanitary supply service organized. The Chinese army, however, was said to be not equipped for maintenance of rigid sanitary measures.

The United States' record of two battle deaths to every other, during the World War, was attributed to a highly trained medical personnel, compulsory vaccination of soldiers, thoroughgoing camp sanitation, particularly for water supply, and adequate provision of hospital facilities.

In the Mexican War, of every 125 casualties, only 15 resulted from bullets—the rest from diseases; in the Civil War, the ratio was 65 disease deaths for every 33 battle casualties. It has been estimated that four-fifths of the casualties of the Crimean War resulted from diseases.

Wu Lein Teh's report said he had been appointed chief of the medical department of the ministry of military affairs, but that "owing to the threatening plague situation in Manchuria" and the absence of a senior medical officer in Europe, he regretfully resigned.

STATE FIREMEN OPEN MEETING HERE SEPT. 30

Big Parade, Salvage and Safety School, Banquet and Ball on Four-Day Program

A uniformed parade of several thousand members is one of the features being arranged by the local committee for the golden jubilee convention of the Firemen's Association of State of Pennsylvania, opening here September 30 for four days.

Five thousand visitors are expected to be here for the fiftieth annual meeting, which is the first gathering of the organization here in 22 years. Included with the organization's program will be sessions of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

OPENS WITH BANQUET

The opening event will be staged September 20 when a banquet will be held in honor of the officers and invited guests. Convention headquarters will be established in the Roosevelt Hotel with business sessions in the Moose Temple. Besides the parade, other features will include a memorial service conducted by the Rev. Samuel H. Stein, of York, chaplain. Two boats have been chartered for excursions down the Ohio River, the second night. A ball and entertainment will be featured the third night in the Syria Mosque.

Special interest will be centered on the firemen's training school here, where practical demonstrations will be given and all delegates invited to participate in classes. Particular attention will be devoted to salvage and fire prevention work.

PROGRAM FOR WOMEN

Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary will be entertained on sightseeing and shopping tours, theater parties and other programs being arranged.

Fire Chief Richard L. Smith is general chairman of the convention committee; F. G. Jones, vice chairman; Edward L. Carlin, secretary; John Lauderbaugh, treasurer, and committee chairmen include George Sparr, John Heinz, Christ Knowlan, William A. Jenkins, Leo J. Connolly, Albert D. Rockenstein, John J. Flaherty and Harry E. Montgomery.

HOOVER'S NAVAL STAND PRAISED

President Hoover's action in suspending cruiser construction has the backing of the Reformed Church in the United States.

The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Schaeffer, president of the General Synod of the Reformed Church, Saturday pointed to this fact. The commission on international friendship at the recent session of the general synod held in Indianapolis presented a strong pronouncement upon disarmament which the representatives of the church adopted.

Dr. Schaeffer sent the following telegram indorsing Hoover's policy:

"Reformed Church in the United States with 360,000 members strongly approves disarmament policy and supports President Hoover in his present efforts to defer cruiser construction."

U. S. BOY SCOUTS SWAMP WALES TO GET PICTURE

'Stampede' Appears to Annoy Prince on Visit to Camp; Dawes Also Makes Call.

Eagle Scout Clark B. Johnston, of Crafton, who has received many honors as an ideal Scout, is reporting details of the International jamboree at Birkenhead, England, for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. His cabled news reports will be published exclusively in the Sun-Telegraph.

By CLARK B. JOHNSTON
Eagle Scout
Correspondent, Sun-Telegraph

ARROWE PARK, England, Aug. 3.—Fifty thousand Boy Scouts from all parts of the world, gathered here for the international jamboree, were wildly enthusiastic over the visit of the Prince of Wales to review the troops.

At the ceremony, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, father of the Boy Scout movement, was created a baron. The Prince extended the greetings of his father, the King.

Earlier in the day the Prince had paid a brief visit to the American camp, and during the afternoon Ambassador Dawes made an unexpected and quite informal call. The Prince appeared slightly annoyed when some of the more enthusiastic boys crowded around him in an effort to get his picture.

We had a Scot Scout for supper, and during the evening the Scots came over and gave a folk dance and joined in our singing. After retreat we lolled around our tents awaiting the rockets which signal Taps. The camp is so large that bugles do not suffice.

We all envied Brandon McInerney, a Rochester, N. Y., boy, whom the Prince of Wales chatted with. Walter Hagen had told the prince that Brandon gives promise of becoming a great golfer.

"Keep your eye on the ball, your head still, and you may go as far as Hagen," the Prince told the 13-year-old boy.

Boy Scouts who are interested and all of the thousands in Western Pennsylvania are interested—in this biggest event in the history of Scoutdom will find exclusively in the Sun-Telegraph news written for them by one of their own Scouts. Scout Johnston will feature the news which he as a Scout knows will be of special interest to Scouts here. Watch the Sun-Telegraph for his articles.

GIRL, 13, ENTRY IN TYPIST TEST

Etna today is preparing to send a 13-year-old girl to Toronto, Can., to compete in the international contests to determine the fastest and most efficient typist in the world.

Almira Hughes, 13, a freshman in the Etna High School, has been selected as the most proficient high school student in the state. She lives at 595 Butler street, and is a home girl and student. She likes music.

The girl will enter in the novice class at the International Typewriting Contest to be staged September 28 at Toronto. The girl has a record of 73 words a minute and will represent Pennsylvania in the contest. A year ago Grace Phelan, of 11 Elm lane, represented the state in the contest and now is able to enter the amateur contest at Toronto.

Mary Lewis, Husband Settle Out of Court

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The office of Attorney Charles W. Craddick, representing Mary Lewis, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York, in her suit against her husband, Michael Franz Bohnen, for separate maintenance, told the Associated Press today that the action had been dismissed and the case settled out of court.

Miss Lewis could not be reached at her Santa Monica home, nor could her husband be located at the studio here where he is making a motion picture. In filing the suit, Miss Lewis said their marriage had interfered with their careers. She also charged Bohnen wth cruelty. They were married in New York, April, 1927.

POISONED NIECE DIES, MAN HELD

OTTAWA, Kan., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Ray Penibaker, 22, farmhand, was in jail here today charged with the murder of his 6-year-old niece, Elva Irene Barnes, who died after eating a candy bar in which, it was alleged, he placed poison and gave to his wife.

Pennibaker was returned here last night from Diagonal, Ia., where he was arrested.

Mrs. Pennibaker, 19, told a coroner's jury that her husband gave her the candy bar before she came here to visit a sister, Mrs. C. C. Barnes. She said she divided the candy among her sister's children and that shortly after Elva Irene had eaten part of it, she stiffened and died. Another child, Gordon Barnes, 7, was made extremely ill.

Dr. Ray Brewster, of the University of Kansas, said after an examination that he found a large quantity of poison in the little girl's stomach.

R. E. Page, county attorney, said Pennibaker admitted purchasing poison at a Clearfield, Ia., drug store, but maintained that he had used it to kill rats. Pennibaker was employed on a farm near Clearfield.

The Pennibakers were married at Bedford, Ia., last June. His first wife died in November, 1927, five months after their marriage. Her death was investigated, but no inquest was held.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

PERMISSION to open branch offices on trans-Atlantic liners was granted today by the New York Stock Exchange to two member firms, De Saint Phalle & Co., and M. J. Meehan & Co.

Up to now, only fragmentary Wall Street radio dispatches have been furnished by several ocean steamers. This service will now be fully increased to include the latest up-to-the-minute stock market quotations and financial news. It is believed the Leviathan and Berengaria will be the first ships so equipped.

National Banks Oppose Ohio Tax

STEUBENVILLE, O., Aug. 3.—National banks of Toronto and Dillonville, O., obtained an injunction in County Court restraining the county treasurer from collecting a state tax levied on national bank shares. The banks allege that the state law was held illegal by the Federal master in a report to United States Judge Benson Hough, Columbus. The National Bank of Toronto asks to be relieved of a tax of $2,047 and the First National of Dillonville, $3,676.

EDISON CHIEF RIVAL, 77, DIES

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Emile Berliner, famous inventor, died here today following a stroke of apoplexy he sustained 10 days ago. He was 77 years old.

Berliner was known as one of the most successful rivals of Thomas A. Edison in the field of invention. Particularly did their fields cross in the matter of the talking machine and the telephone, their rival claims in these fields precipitating one of the most extensive differences ever known in scientific circles.

He was born in Hanover, Germany, May 21, 1851. He remained in Germany, receiving his education, until 1870, when he came to the United States and established his home here.

Butler Man Sued Over Auto Crash

BUTLER, Pa., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Damages aggregating $55,000 were asked in a suit filed by Alvin B. Nessokoff of Pittsburgh against A. O. Stein of Butler as the result of an automobile accident here last July 7. Florence Roth and her mother, Mrs. Emma Roth of Pittsburgh, also were passengers in the Nessokoff machine.

SPEEDY

GRADUATED— Miss Nellie Norcus, 2316 Beelen street, believed to be setting an educational speed record. She is to be graduated with a bachelor's degree from the summer session at Pitt after only two and a half years of study.

AIMS OF LABOR TO GO ON RADIO

Pittsburgh's labor unions are considering the use of radio to educate the public as to the purposes of organized labor.

Secretary P. J. McGrath, of the Street Railway Men's Union, said Saturday that representatives of the various labor unions already have met to discuss the subject.

Mr. McGrath is the chairman of the temporary committee in charge. He says that the various unions are anxious to inform the public just what the organized labor movement means. The subject has not as yet reached the point as to what radio stations the unions will attempt to use.

Steubenville Woman Held Under Mann Act

STEUBENVILLE, O., Aug. 3.—A charge under the Mann act was filed here against Mrs. Mollie Cohen and she was held under $2,500 bond for hearing, while Louise Parks, 24, Erie, Pa., was held as a material witness. It is alleged by Federal agents that the young woman was transported from Erie via Pittsburgh to Steubenville and placed in care of the Cohen woman.

Woman, 104, Is Arrested Fifth Time in Dry Law

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Aug. 3.

DEPUTY sheriffs here today were up against a problem involving extreme old age and prohibition enforcement.

After six gallons of hootch and a barrel of mash had been seized at her home, they arrested "Aunt Mary" Gentile, 104, and took her to the county jail, but, owing to her age and frail condition, they didn't have the heart to lock her up.

Still, "Aunt Mary" had been arrested four times before for liquor making and peddling, and the officers think something ought to be done about it.

Bandits Halt Guard; One Dead, Other Hit

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Two robbers, brothers, chose a private watchman for a holdup prospect today. One paid with his life and the other may die. John Novak, 21, was slain. The brother, Henry, 18, was shot twice, one bullet lodging against the spine.

When they ordered Fred Lechemerger, 60, to raise his hands, he whipped out a revolver and emptied it before they could use their own pistols.

PITTSBURGH AIR MAIL LINK TO SOUTH PLANNED

Hoover Committee Recommends Route—Advertise For Bids Next Month.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS,
Sun-Telegraph Washington Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Information gained from official quarters revealed today that the special inter-departmenetal committee appointed by President Hoover to deal with aviation matters has recommended the establishment of an air mail route between Pittsburgh and Norfolk by way of Washington.

An advertisement for bids on the new route will be issued in September, it is stated. Already members of the inter-departmental committee, consisting of the various assistant secretaries in charge of aviation activities, have assured themselves of the success of the project, and a number of air mail operators are expected to respond to the call for bids.

PLAN BEFORE BROWN

The recommendations of the committee, submitted in the form of a report, are now in the hands of Postmaster General Walter F. Brown, who will be required to give his final approval before formally announcing the plans.

At the same time it was learned that the special inter-departmental committee has recommended a new route from New York to Miami which will cut off three hours' flying time over the present route via Atlanta. The new Miami line calls for a direct extension from Richmond to Jacksonville, via Raleigh, Charleston and Savannah, leaving Atlanta to the right on the south-bound flight.

Thus the important Pittsburgh industrial district will have air mail facilities tapping the main trunk lines leading into the South from New York. The new lines will also give Pittsburgh its first air mail service to the capital of the nation, resulting in a great saving in time of mail deliveries.

Meantime, the special committee is giving its consideration to the proposed route from St. Louis to New York via Pittsburgh, with the possibility that its establishment may be announced in September along with the Pittsburgh-Washington-Norfolk advertisement for bids. Hearings on the former project were conducted here this week.

ROUTE UNSETTLED

Before a decision is reached it will be necessary for the committee to iron out differences among several cities which are competing for a place on the route. There is some question as to whether the route will include Cincinnati or Columbus. Also considerable rivalry has developed between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia advocates. Representatives of the latter Pennsylvania city want the route to include a stop within Philadelphia borders, while it has been suggested that the most direct course calls for the elimination of Philadelphia by proceeding in a straight line to New York after leaving Pittsburgh.

Another phase of the route under consideration here calls for an extension from St. Louis to Tulsa and Dallas and Fort Worth, Tex.

C. OF C. REPRESENTED

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce was represented at the hearings here this week by Raymond Henry, who declared that the industries of the city, because of their national character, needed a further outlet by air mail over present facilities provided by the Post Office Department.

"Pittsburgh," he said, "is going to erect one of the finest airports in the country, and it will need a direct connection by air mail with New York. Trade advantages will follow the establishment of such a route."

R. H. Horton, representing the mayor of Philadelphia, said he had not received sufficient notice of the hearing. He asked permission to prepare and file a brief showing why Philadelphia should be included in the proposed route from St. Louis to New York.

STEEL STOCKS RUSH HIGHER IN LIST HERE

Foundry Scores 20-Point Upturn; Witherow, Standard Steel Propeller in Demand.

Sensational advances in the industrial specialties and steel issues were recorded on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange during the week just ended.

Trading activity centered in half a dozen of the industrials and two or three of the fuels. Pittsburgh Steel Foundry was the most spectacular of the industrial section, rising approximately 20 points in connection with the company's acquisition of the Sharon Foundry Company. While less than 4,000 shares of the stock changed hands on the movement, the price range covered exactly 20 points, from 45 to 65, but there was a little profit-taking at the end of the week and the close was 4 points under the high figure.

BLAW KNOX RECEDES

At the start of the week Blaw Knox and Union Steel Casting held the center of the stage, both rising to new record prices on the announcement that Blaw Knox would take over Union Steel, Lewis Foundry and National Alloy Steel. The exchange terms with Union Steel will be 87½ shares of Blaw Knox for 100 Union. Following the spurt in response to the merger proposal, moderate liquidation came into both stocks and they closed the week about two points under the previous Saturday's finals.

Witherow Steel was whirled up easily when the Street got wind of a big order from the Ford Motor Company. Confirmation of the report was unobtainable, but Street gossip had it that the contract was only the first of several similar orders to be placed.

ENGINEERING JOINS RISE

United Engineering joined the rise late in the week, as did Standard Steel Propeller. The latter was rushed up more than 14 points but, aside from reports of new orders being put on the books, there was nothing to account for the spirited advance.

In the fuel section, Lone Star developed strength in the last two sessions after having lagged for about two weeks. Rights on Lone Star expire tomorrow, and it is thought elimination of this factor will be followed by definite improvement in the market position of the shares. Western Public Service was active, but reflected mild pressure and closed the week with a loss of a point. This stock achieved its predicted level of 40 recently and the present resting period was anticipated by the traders. Friends of the company have not altered their opinion as to its outlook and big things are expected of the stock over the next year or so.

Bank issues were quiet, but very strong. Peoples Trust scored a gain of over 20 points on sales of about 500 shares, but the other issues were handled in small lots.

SHARP GAIN IN PROFITS SHOWN BY DIXIE GAS

Development of New Towns Being Shown in Greater Earnings in Present Year

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

Rapid growth in the use of gas in new territories opened by Dixie Gas and Utilities Company has resulted in a sharp increase in the organization's earnings. In the 12 months ended June 30, 1929, net profit after interest but before reserves for depreciation, depletion and Federal taxes, was $522,896. This compared with $306,770 in the 12 months ended December 31, 1928, and indicates that rapid progress is being made in co-ordinating the activities of the various units brought together by the company.

After deducting dividends on the $1,665,000 of 7 per cent preferred stock, profits for the 12 months ended with June were equivalent to $2.59 a share on the 201,700 shares of common stock, compared with 96 cents a share in the calendar year of 1928.

For the six months ended June 30 net income amounted to $357,140 or $1.77 per share, as compared with $95,424 or 47 cents per share for the same period in 1928.

Further evidence of the improvement in the company's position can be seen by comparing May of this year, when $25,461 was earned, with May, 1928, when profits amounted to only $5,998.

April showed an even more impressive expansion, with profits of $44,253, compared with $5,803 a year ago.

EXPANSION EXPECTED

Continued growth in both gross and net income is expected over a long period of time. The company was organized in 1927 to acquire a large number of gas properties in Eastern Texas and to establish gas service in hitherto untouched territory.

Previous experience in the gas business has shown that about three years are required to adequately develop gas distribution in new territories. According to this, Dixie Gas is just beginning to show the results of its pioneering efforts. Under normal conditions this rate of growth should be continued for some time to come.

The communities being served are growing at a rapid rate and this is expected to bring about further expansion of the company's earnings after the initial development of the new territories is completed.

The company's principal business is the transportation and distribution of gas to 22 cities and towns. It also owns gas producing leases in the Richland Parish and Wascom fields in Louisiana, from which it sells gas at wholesale.

SUPPLY ADEQUATE

An ample supply of gas is assured through a pipe line being constructed to the Dixie Gulf Gas properties in the Munroe and Richland gas fields. Dixie Gulf is estimated to have an available supply of 1,000,000,000 cubic feet of gas a day.

Dixie Gas and Utilities and Dixie Gulf are both controlled by the United Gas Company.

The production owned by Dixie Gas in Richland Parish, La., is estimated to amount to a total reserve of 75,000,000,000 cubic feet. A contract has been made for the sale of the entire output to the Moody-Seagraves Gas Company, Inc. Under this contract it is estimated that Dixie Gas will receive $1,179,000 over a period of two and one-half years which began July 1, 1928.

The financing of recent improvements in the properties will be provided for by the sale of additional stock. Common holders of record August 31 have been offered rights to buy one new share at $12.50 for each three shares held. The rights will expire on September 20.

Trading in the stock, which is listed on the Pittsburgh Exchange, will be started on the New York Curb on Monday.

LETTERS FROM INVESTORS

Conducted by Leo Hillmann

TWO STOCKS.

Mrs. D. A.—I am a reader of your paper and have noticed your advice to others. I own no stocks or bonds but have $3,500 in a savings bank. What is your opinion of a purchase of American Car and Foundry.

Ans.—American Car and Foundry is in strong financial position, but for the past two years earnings have declined because the railroads were slow to buy new equipment. A more conservative stock for you would be 10 shares American Sugar Refining preferred. But why limit yourself to one security? You might add 10 shares North American Edison preferred. Both would cost less than $2,100 and the income is $130. This would leave $1,400 for the savings bank, which is not too much.

CONTINUE WITH BANK

Miss E. B.—I am 19, self-supporting, and through much effort have saved $500. I am interested in a better income and shall await your advice.

Ans.—Don't rush. You could get only a few dollars additional income were you to put the money in a sound security. Furthermore, there would be nothing left for emergencies. Your one best course is to continue regular deposits in the bank. Write to us for advice when you have accumulated $2,000.

BUSINESS WOMAN SAVES

Miss K. K.—I am a stenographer, salary $35 weekly. I own 10 shares Cities Service new and two Pennsylvania Railroad. I have $1,500 in a savings bank and want to buy another stock. What do you suggest?

Ans.—Can you get along with a surplus of $500? Then, buy 10 shares American Water Works and Electric first preferred. The cost will be $1,000; income $60. Your income from Pennsylvania Railroad and Cities Service is well-protected. Build up the bank account to $2,000 before buying further securities.

MAY BUY STOCK

F. K.—My mother who owns 20 shares North American preferred and 10 United States Rubber preferred is contemplating the purchase of 15 shares St. Louis-San Francisco preferred. What is your opinion in the matter?

Ans.—You may tell your mother she has picked an excellent stock. St. Louis-San Francisco has shown good earnings for several years. The present 6 per cent preferred replaced a similar issue retired in June, 1928. Fifteen shares, will cost about $1,400; the income is $90. Your mother derives no income from United States Rubber preferred. She can, however, count on the income from North American preferred.

ANOTHER BOND

C. S.—I own $1,000 Kingdom of Denmark 6s, 1942, 40 shares Vacuum Oil, 30 Penick & Ford, 20 each Standard Oil of New York, Studebaker, Equitable Trust, 10 each North American preferred, McKeesport Tin Plate and three Delaware and Hudson. I have $1,500 in a savings bank, which I want to invest. What do you suggest?

Ans.—Are you quite sure you do not need a surplus of $1,500 cash in the bank Of course, if you can get along with less, a bond would fit in nicely. Buy $1,000 Kresge Foundation guaranteed 6s, 1936. Most of your securities are fine, but you have one speculative stock, Penick & Ford. No dividend has been paid since July, 1927.

WOULD BUY BONDS

C. H.—I am a working man, with one dependent. I own 10 shares each Huyler's of Delaware preferred and McKesson and Robbins preferred. I have $2,000 in a savings bank, which I want to invest. Please advise.

Ans.—Bonds would be a proper purchase for you now. But leave $1,000 in the bank account. Get $1,000 S. W. Strauss 6s. The income will be about $20 more than savings bank interest. Hold the stocks you now own.

STOCKS FOR INCOME

J. C.—I have just sold my home for $10,000 and want to invest $5,000 in securities that will bring 6½ per cent. The rest I intend to put in a saving bank.

Ans.—Under ordinary circumstances, you would not need to keep as much as $5,000 in the bank. You may have a special reason. For a little less than $4,900 you could get 10 shares each American Ice preferred, American Sugar Refining preferred, Bayuk Cigar first preferred, Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific 7 per cent preferred and 15 Lehn and Fink. The annual income will be $322.

$1,000 FOR STOCK

G. B.—I own $3,000 S. W. Strauss 6s, 20 shares St. Joseph Lead, 10 each American Telephone and Telegraph, Armour of Delaware preferred, Public Service of New Jersey 6 per cent preferred, General Motors and five Radio. I have $2,000 in a savings bank and want to put $1,000 in a dependable stock. What shall I buy?

Ans.—Ten shares North American Edison preferred will cost $1,000 and bring an income of $60. Your bonds are well-rated and income is assured from most of your stocks. Radio common pays nothing. To that extent the stock is speculative.

NOT ENOUGH

Miss R. T.—I am an office worker and have noticed your advice to others. I own no stocks or bonds but have saved $1,000. Do you think I should seek a better income than bank interest?

Ans.—Not now. You wouldn't materially increase it by buying standard securities, nor would you have a reserve for emergencies. You know how to save. Continue with the bank until you accumulate $2,000. Then write to us again.

WOULD SPECULATE

A. C.—A friend who has been quite successful in making money in Wall Street told me to buy Continental Baking "B." What is your opinion?

Ans.—We advise on investment. Any attempt to give speculative advice would be guessing. Continental Baking "B" pays no dividend. In fact, in 1928 nothing was earned on the outstanding 2,000,000 shares "B" stock, contrasted with five cents a share in 1927. Does that look encouraging? But if you want to speculate, don't let us influence you.

EARNINGS GOOD

V. M.—Permit me to thank you for previous advice, which was excellent. Now, I want your opinion of a purchase of Consolidated Cigar prior preferred. When is the next dividend due?

Ans.—The current quarterly dividend on Consolidated Cigar prior preferred was paid August 1 to holders of record July 18. Earnings in 1928 were $32.74 a share on the prior preferred, compared with $26.45 in 1927; in the March quarter they were $6.08 against $6.24 for corresponding period in 1928. The company, incorporated 1919, acquired assets and properties of four cigar concerns established about 50 years ago. We approve of a purchase of a fair amount to hold.

GOOD ISSUES

R. S.—Recently, I have become a reader of your paper because of the excellent financial page. I have $1,000 in a savings bank and want to buy a sound stock. What do you think of Pennsylvania Railroad, Baltimore and Ohio, or General Motors?

Ans.—Though you pick good dividend payers, your surplus is insufficient. You should always be prepared to meet any unexpected demand for cash, which would not be the case were you to buy stocks now. Don't be impatient. Build up your surplus to $2,000. Then consult us.

ANOTHER STOCK

H. S.—I am a subscriber. I bought 15 shares each Pennsylvania Railroad, Southern Pacific, Public Service of New Jersey 6 per cent preferred, Public Service of New Jersey 7 per cent preferred, and nine American Telephone and Telegraph. I have $3,500 in a savings bank and want to invest $2,000 in more stocks.

Ans.—Ten shares each Devoe & Raynolds first preferred and Standard Power and Light preferred would cost less than $2,000. The annual income is 140, or 6:3 per cent. Your stocks are excellent dividend payers; keep them.

LARGE SUPPLY SENDS WHEAT MARKET OFF

Immense Receipts Help to Lower Prices Ten Cents a Bushel Under Monday's.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Faced by prospective big receipts Monday and staggering under an almost unmanageable burden of supplies, the wheat market today plunged heavily downgrade. Meanwhile, primary receipts of domestic wheat had reached the huge total of 37,012,000 bushels for the week, compared with 24,497,000 bushels a year ago. Exporters were credited with having bought 1,000,000 bushels of United States wheat today, but this amount failed outright to uphold prices as against the rush of rural holders to market their wheat without delay.

Closing quotations on wheat were heavy at 1⅝c to 2⅜c under yesterday's finish. Corn closed 1⅝c to 2½c off, oats ⅞@1c to 1⅜c down and provisions unchanged to a setback of 2 cents.

COTTON CLOSES FIRM AT GAIN

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Reactions from an early advance under week-end realizing, promoted by a rather more favorable view of weather outlook, were followed by renewed firmness in the cotton market today. December contracts, after selling off from 19.17 to 19.08, advanced to 19.25, and closed at 19.24, with the general market closing firm at net advances of 10 to 14 points.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at about 33,000 bales, against 40,000 last year.

Spot cotton, 19.00c. Range on futures reported by A. E. Masten & Co.:

MORGAN FIRM IN P. & G.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 3.—Stockholders of Procter & Gamble Company have approved a 5-for-1 split of the common stock and authorized creation of 7,500,000 common shares.

Stockholders also approved sale to J. P. Morgan & Co. of 150,000 new common shares at $66.66⅔ and granted an option to the same interests for purchase of 100,000 additional shares at $80 a share before February 12, 1930.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Entrance of the Morgan banking interests into Procter & Gamble comes upon the heels of formation of the Morgan holding company, Standard Brands, Inc., as a consolidation of the Fleischmann Company, Royal Baking Powder Company and E. W. Gillette Company, Ltd. The deal has aroused speculation in Wall street as to whether it may be the eventual plan to include Procter & Gamble in the Standard Brands combine.

Living Cost Shows Decrease in June

Foreign Buying of Copper Still High

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Foreign buying of copper continued excellent with early advices from abroad in today's half day session estimating about 1,700,000 pounds engaged for shipment abroad. The price was strong at 18.30 cents a pound Cif. Hamburg.

Domestic buying in past few days has been heavy and demand this morning was stated to be excellent. Price was firm at 18 cents a pound, delivered, Connecticut valley basis.

Automotive Goods Exports Increase

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Automotive goods exports from the United States during the first six months of current year reached a value of $34,672,400 against $20,813,300 for same period last year, an increase of 19 per cent, Department of Commerce announced today.

The volume increase in general was much larger inasmuch as there was practically a universal decline in prices of all automotive goods during the half year of 1929.

Packard to Start Diesel Air Engine Production Monday

DETROIT, Aug. 3.—Production of the newly developed Packard Diesel airplane engine starts Monday, August 5, according to officials of the company. Initial installation of machinery and equipment for operating the recently completed Diesel engine plant has been effected, it was stated.

Setting up of the complete manufacturing facilities necessary to fulfill the 500 motors per month capacity of the new Packard unit, will be carried on simultaneously with the production of the first units.

"Our Diesel engine for airplanes," said G. H. Brood, expert engineer, has been successfully subjected to approximately 300 flying hours for test purposes. The first motors produced will be practically at a hand manufactured rate, pending the completion of installing manufacturing equipment and the passing of the Department of Commerce's tests."

Republic Steel Co. Gets Big Pipe Order

Republic Iron and Steel Company has received orders for feeder pipe for a line from Monroe, La., to Birmingham, Ala., and will produce this tubing on its electrical welding machine.

Studebaker Reduces Prices $20 to $250

Studebaker Corporation announced that, effective Monday, it will reduce prices on 30 of its models from $20 to $250.

Westinghouse Electric Rises 14 to New High

By BROADAN WALL.
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—Stocks continued to forge ahead in an aggressive manner during Saturday's short session. Demand for the better grade issues was almost insatiable, with the result that violent advances were recorded. Sharpest gains were registered in the higher priced issues that have been in the speculative limelight of late.

Westinghouse Electric distinguished itself by advancing more than 14 points to a new peak, while American Can gained approximately two points. International Telephone and Telegraph was up 2⅝, American Smelting 2¼, Brooklyn Union Gas 9, Consolidated Gas 5⅝, International Nickel 3⅞, Electric Autolite 2¾, Engineers Public Service 3, General Public Service 7¼ and DuPont 3¾.

International Telephone again mounted to a new high record on the report that the English investment trust had finished accumulating its stock. It is understood that this investment trust worked in harmony with the sponsors of the stock. While the trust was accumulating the stock, the interested group remained aloof. Now, however, that accumulation has been completed, a sharp advance in the stock is looked for.

GO TO NEW HIGHS

American Can also attained a new peak under aggressive operations by interests that have been accumulating the stock for many months. Buying in Can is based on the knowledge that earnings are running at a record-breaking pace and that a stock dividend will be declared either late this year or early in 1930.

Westinghouse Electric advanced sharply on active buying. The spectacular rise in this stock reflected the steady depletion in the floating supply of Westinghouse brought about by recent absorption by prominent individuals and investment trusts.

OFFERINGS ABSORBED

Week-end profit-taking developed in some parts of the list, but offerings from this quarter were exceptionally well absorbed. As a matter of fact, many traders had looked for more hesitation than materialized during the short session. The manner in which realizing sales were absorbed, consequently, proved a favorable surprise to interests working on the constructive side of the market.

Utility stocks were well bought throughout the course of the session, particularly the Stone & Webster group, General Public Service rose more than seven points while Engineers Public Service gained about three points. The strength in these issues was reflected in Stone & Webster, which advanced about two points.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Curb Exchange stocks moved irregularly higher in the face of active profit-taking in today's short session under the leadership of the investment trusts and the utilities. Several issues made wide gains, with an extreme of 49½ points netted by Aluminum Company.

Electric Bond and Share resumed its leadership of the utilities, as the Insull group of stocks encountered heavy realizing. Bond and Share, Electric Investors and Northern States Power "A" rose more than one to 3¼. Central States Electric preferred shot up 28 points to a new high at 179. Insull Utility Investment shot up to 160, a new top, then reacted and closed at 143. Middle West Utilities lost 7.

In the Investment Trust group new highs were reached by Capital Administration "A," Canadian Investors, Southern Corporation and Utility Equities. National Investors yielded 8 points, while Shenandoah and Interstate Equities made small gains.

Dayton Airplane and Standard Steel Propeller rose to new tops.

Newmont Mining lost 3 points of its sharp gain made earlier in the week.

New York Bond Market

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The bond market moved a shade higher in today's quiet short session. Convertibles, taken in large blocks, developed pronounced strength and the telephone twins, American and International 4½s, got to new highs.

Some fair trading appeared among the standard rails, which were irregular. Steel company issues advanced in the industrial group and the trend of the utilities was upward, although transactions ruled small. United States government securities held firm on exceptionally small turnovers.

The share privilege bonds absorbed approximately 50 per cent of the day's business, the two telephone debentures alone accounting for $1,750,000 of the $5,300,000 total.

A new favorite was the General Public Service Corporation 5½s, admitted to trading Wednesday, which rose 8 points to 118.

Other strong convertibles were Alleghany Corporation 5s, 1949, up 1; Atchison 4½s, up 1, and American International Corporation 5½s, up fractionally.

Changes in the investment rail list included fractional losses by Baltimore and Ohio first 5s, Central Pacific 5s, St. Louis and San Francisco 4s and Missouri Pacific general 4s. The most important gains were shown in Baltimore and Ohio 4s, Toledo and Cincinnati division; Rock Island refunding 4s and Erie 4s.

Transactions in the most active bonds on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday were as follows, 000 omitted in sales column (United States bonds in dollars and thirty-seconds of dollars):

ARREST THREE IN RUM SALES

WHEELING, W. Va., Aug. 3.—Peter Zellers, known in Wheeling and Pittsburgh liquor circles as one of the leaders in the handling of wet goods over a period of years, was arrested today upon a federal warrant, charging conspiracy to violate the national prohibition law. Arrested with him were "Butch" Knabe and W. R. O'Donnell. They are charged with operating the "Bird of Paradise Club." Their arrests followed an investigation by undercover agents from the office of H. D. (Three-Gun) Wilson, of Pittsburgh.

New Highs and Lows Established in Week

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—For the first time in several weeks the number of stocks to establish record low prices during the past week exceeded the issues selling at new high prices. Forty-four sold at new highs and 65 sank to new lows for the year.

Six of the leaders to establish new tops were: American Telephone and Telegraph, Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, Bethlehem Steel, Consolidated Gas of New York, International Telephone and Telegraph and U. S. Steel.

Six issues to sell at new lows were: Barnsdall "A," By-Products Coke, Cluett-Peabody, Endicott-Johnson, Fisk Rubber Tire and Graham Paiga.

HUSTON LOOMS AS G. O. P. CHIEF

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Chairman Hubert Work is now expected to call the Republican National Committee together in Washington between September 5 and 14 to select a successor for himself and to act on other shifts regarded as likely in the party's titular leadership.

That is the word being passed around in political circles here, with speculation centering about Claudius H. Huston, of Tennessee, as the probable choice for the chairmanship Work is to relinquish.

Huston's name has figured prominently in the speculation for some time, and a statement by Senator Moses of New Hampshire, that New England members of the committee favored his selection, is regarded as supporting the gossip to the effect that he now has a clear majority. Moses, who was called here for a conference with President Hoover on various topics, expressed the opinion afterward that the Tennessean would be elected.

The vice chairmanship now held by Mrs. A. T. Hert, of Kentucky, is another committee office which is expected in many quarters to change hands at the meetings. Mrs. Worthington Scranton, of Scranton, Pa., is mentioned as a probable successor to Mrs. Hert.

EDISON AND HIS PROTEGE

CONGRATULATIONS!—Edison, the inventive genius, congratulating Wilbur, Bishop's son from Port Madison, Wash., upon his selection from among 49 boys, including Ivan Getting, Pittsburgh, to receive an education sponsored by Edison so that he can go into Edison's laboratories and perhaps carry on with Edison's work.

Play With Knife May Cost Boy's Eye

GREENSBURG, Pa., Aug. 3.—Playing the old time game of mumble-de-peg with a jack knife may result in the loss of the right eye of Carl Bender, 9-year-old Snydertown lad. Attempting to throw the knife over his right shoulder, the blade penetrated his eye.

30,000 Employees Of Westinghouse Picnic Saturday

Approximately 30,000 employes of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company are expected to attend the forty-third annual outing and basket picnic of the company, which is to be held in Kennywood Park next Saturday. Special cars will carry the workers to the park from the East Pittsburgh, Trafford, Homewood and Nuttal works of the company, according to J. P. Morgan, chairman of the picnic committee.

There will be track and field events for both men and women, the men's events being conducted under the Amateur Athletic Union sponsorship. A fine musical program will be presented by the Westinghouse Band, the Westinghouse Chorus and the Westinghouse Kilty Band. More than 90,000 amusement tickets will be distributed to employes' children and tickets for refreshments also will be given to the tots.

About 100 older men, members of the Westinghouse Pensioners' group, will be entertained at a dinner during the afternoon.

Africa Expedition Halted by Fever

LAGOS, Southern Nigeria, Africa, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The Colorado African expedition led by Paul C. Hoefler has arrived here, accomplishing the first crossing of Central Africa from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean by automobile.

Members of the expedition lived with Ituri forest pygmies and were the first white men to visit the strange village of Kiyabe in the French Congo. They had planned additional travel but fever and hardships encountered are causing the expedition to return home from here. This was the second expedition backed by Denver, Col., residents and led by Mr. Hoefler to Africa.

Japanese Officials Inspect Cruiser

TOKIO, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Premier Hamaguchi and his ministers today were aboard the new cruiser Myoko during its first cruise after delivery to the navy July 31. The Myoko, steaming off Yokosuka naval base, attained a speed of 33 knots.

Its modern armament, catapults, anti-aircraft guns and the like, were shown to the ministers before they returned to Tokio.

"Heritage, My Son—Is the Greatest Word in Our Language"

ALL human development is dependent upon the health of the people. All future remedies will be to build up and increase the blood cell. Health is wealth. Pure blood is the first requisite to perfect health. We all know that the blood is the life; it contains the essential nutritive elements, organic and mineral, required for the maintenance of function and structure. Both organic and mineral constituents are derived from the food eaten from day to day, and most all chronic ailments as well as susceptibility to acute infections can be traced directly to a deficiency in the dietary. This is well illustrated in rickets, scurvy and multiple neuritis, and probably the same is true of cancer and tuberculosis. It is also a well-known fact that unsuitable food leads to debility, hence many persons suffer from debility, due to bad digestion, and yet have food in abundance. They are victims of impaired digestive capacity and bacterial infection, persistent and self-perpetuating.

BLOOD CELL PROTEIN SERUMS—Means Heritage for the World! What Is More Valuable?

Why Drug the Stomach When Your Blood Cells Control High Blood Pressure and Most All Chronic Diseases?

The blood stream is merely the medium through which these energies float and carry on their duties. If the stream is thick and slovenly, if engorged, swollen, contracted or tortuous, is not the function hampered or arrested as the case may be? A clot in the brain—apoplexy. If a stoppage in the lungs or limbs—dropsy. If in the brain—paralysis. If in the heart—sudden death. If in the eye—blindness. If too much blood—vertigo, insomnia. Repeated colds, low vitality, due to faulty blood. The germs themselves are harmless, but the toxins formed by them produce the poisoning. If an infection takes place, what suffers? The blood. In fever, where is temperature the highest? In the blood. In malaria, where is the germ? In the blood. In diphtheria, smallpox, rheumatism, gout—nearly all infections find their seat in the blood stream. Don't you believe it is time to give some special thought to these basic facts and eliminate this stomach drugging, which you know is wrong, neglecting the one only sure and effective avenue of medication — the blood stream?

Lack of Protein Hinders Cells' Work

Chemical analysis and physiological investigation establish the living principle in the protoplasmic cell — the physical unit in both animal and plant life. When the body cells undergo degenerative changes in Bright's Disease, arteriosclerosis and in all chronic diseases, we find distinct and demonstrable evidence of impairment in nutrition.

Thousands of patients (men and women), were successfully treated for Rheumatism, Anemia, Debility, Diabetes, Asthma, Kidney Troubles, Heart Trouble, Stomach Trouble, High Blood Pressure, Blood and Skin Diseases.

Watch Your Blood Pressure. Copeland says about one-third human family die from it.

Patients pay small cost of Serum only. One Serum gives relief in many cases. Come and talk to patients. Hundreds are being treated. They are satisfied—come and see for yourself. 35,000 treated here during past seven years.

All Laboratory examinations of blood Free.

Ask Director Clark To Educate, Not Nab City's Jaywalkers

Educate the jay walkers before arresting them is the substance of a letter from the Better Traffic Committee to Director James M. Clark.

Although the new vehicular code requires pedestrians to observe the lights the same as motorists, the letter states, the committee feels that a strong educational campaign should precede any drastic enforcement.

Clark is called on in the letter to direct traffic officers to teach pedestrians the proper observance of the lights. No penalty for "jay walking" is included in the vehicular code, but a city ordinance is being prepared providing for their arrest.

Alliance Dedicates Municipal Airport

ALLIANCE, O., Aug. 3.—Twenty-five thousand people are expected to attend the formal dedication of the Alliance Airport, with an aerial circus to be stagd by the local post of the American Legion, today and Sunday. Police, World War veterans, members of the National Guard, Boy Scouts and the schoolboy patrol, are to be mustered into an emergency traffic squad to handle the cars and supervise parking at the port.

Four Children See Auto Kill Brother

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Aug. 3.—Frank Schlosser, aged 4, was killed when struck by a car police said was driven recklessly by Steve Sabo, 22. Three sisters and a brother saw the child killed.

Accused Man Wins Dry Law Dispute

WHEELING, W. Va., Aug. 3.—William (Bill) Lias won a skirmish with the government here last night when a charge of interfering with Department of Justice agents was withdrawn. The charges were preferred by Francis Vincent Hertzig, agent of the Treasury Department. Lias was at liberty under $5,000 bond. He served a five-year term in Atlanta some time ago for conspiracy to violate the national prohibition law.

AMBRIDGE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Burned Tuesday evening when he fell over a bucket of scalding water, Joseph Varfo, 4, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Vargo, died at the family home.

Foreign War Vets Plan Special Train For St. Paul Trip

Past National Inspector Oliver W. Graham, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, is arranging for a special train to carry local veterans to the national encampment which is to be staged in St. Paul, Minn., August 25 to 30. As chairman of the transport committee, Mr. Graham plans to have the special train leave here the night of August 23.

A 12 hour stop is to be made at Kilbourne, Wis., giving the local delegates time to go sight-seeing and enjoy a steamboat ride on the Wisconsin river.

Plans are being made for the proposed headquarters of Malate Post No. 12, Veterans of Foreign Wars. Members are working hard in their drive for additional funds with which to build the home.

Gypsy Sews Paper In Coat, Not Money

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Adolph Steem had plenty of sobs in his voice today as he hummed "Just Like a Gypsy." He reported a gypsy fortune teller "blessed" $3,000 of his money and then sewed it in his coat lining, telling him to go home, where he would find a great deal more coin. Steem sadly informed police that he found nothing but pieces of newspaper in his coat when he went to inspect the money that had been "blessed."

Levine's Father At Sharon Club

SHARON, Pa., Aug. 3.—Isaac Levine, father of Charles Levine, famous aviator, was one of the speakers at the Rotary Club luncheon. He is head of the Sharon Tube Company which was recently organized.

AUTOMOBILE SALESMEN

It costs more to live now than ever before, but isn't it worth it?

During the past two months we have rebuilt our compensation plan for salesmen so that our men may live and enjoy life.

Our rebuilding of the plan of compensation required us to make a large reduction in the number of salesmen on our force. Under our plan we cannot retain men unless they can make over $600 per month. Some of our men are now making over $1,000 per month.

We can now use four additional men.

If you can sell automobiles and are willing to work and have a desire to double your present income, we have a place for you.

Do not waste your time and ours out of idle curiosity—If you are a real he-man and can stand on your own feet and sell automobiles, come in—we will talk it over with you.

The Vaporine Method.

VAPORINE

The Ultra Modern Permanent Wave

Vaporine has at last come to Pittsburgh, after having successfully been used by the most exclusive shops in the country. Many of the most prominent shops in this city now have it in use, such shops as McCreery's, Gimbels, Madame Castelles and many others with highly satisfactory results.

Vaporine not only permits the hair to have a perfect natural wave, but such hair as has an old permanent partly grown out. Also fine hair, bleaches, vegetable dyes and hennas. Many women with hair heretofore considered unwaveable can now have their hair permanently waved and at the same time rejuvenated. Information concerning the Vaporine method and supplies can be found listed in the Woman's Realm. Phone or call

Richard's Permanent
Here's What It Offers:
1—No risk to beautiful hair. Insures perfect safety. No harmful borax pads or unsafe solution used. Our new way eliminates this.
2—Does not dry out hair. Keeps it pliable, naturally soft and beautiful. Most hair can be waved and rewaved and then rewaved again and it will still retain its original soft, entrancing luster.

The Vaporine Method.

VAPORINE
The Ultra Modern Permanent Wave
Vaporine has at last come to Pittsburgh, after having successfully been used by the most exclusive shops in the country. Many of the most prominent shops in this city now have it in use, such shops as McCreery's, Gimbels, Madame Castelles and many others with highly satisfactory results.
Vaporine not only permits the hair to have a perfect natural wave, but such hair as has an old permanent partly grown out. Also fine hair, bleaches, vegetable dyes and hennas. Many women with hair heretofore considered unwaveable can now have their hair permanently waved and at the same time rejuvenated. Information concerning the Vaporine method and supplies can be found listed in the Woman's Realm. Phone or call

SQUIRREL HILL TO GET BIG NEW APARTMENTS

Fox Chapel Plot Opened; Butler Street Buildings, North Side Holding Traded

Two 12-family apartments will be erected by Max Boyer on a site fronting 165 feet on Wightman street near Hobart street, Squirrel Hill. The ground was purchased through the Smith Brothers Realty Company from Herman Kamin for $32,800.

The same brokers sold for Harry Mellon to William Goldberger a plot of vacant fronting 320 feet on North Euclid avenue in the Highland Entrance plan for $30,400. The purchaser will build a home.

They also sold for Harry Mellon to Regina Little a house at 2625 Beechwood boulevard for $16,500, and for W. Neil Smith to Leon Spitzer a house and garage at 1019 Duffield street for $13,200.

NEW LOT PLAN OPEN

A new lot plan known as Crouse Meadows in the Fox Chapel district of O'Hara Township, overlooking the Allegheny valley, has been placed on the market. The tract includes a number of forest trees. The lots are large and level.

The Auslander-Krasnow Company sold for C. L. Levinson to Andrew Reagan a building containing three stores and six apartments at 3426-30 Butler street and a house in the rear fronting on Penn avenue. In part payment, Reagan conveyed a three-story brick store and apartment building at 2052 Beaver avenue, North Side, on a lot 20x140 feet.

A tract 150x150 feet fronting on Beechwood boulevard, Squirrel Hill, has been sold through the Forbes-Murray Realty Company, Inc., for E. J. Hall to Raymond C. Young for $20,000. The purchaser will improve the lot with three homes.

506 MORTGAGES

C. H. Rodgers, of Rodgers and Sparks, of Butler, Pa., has taken over the interest of Homer H. Sparks and the firm will continue in the general real estate business. The office is in the Boyd Building, Main and Diamond streets, Butler. Mr. Rodgers was general manager of a large real estate organization in Pittsburgh for a number of years.

There were 506 mortgages placed on record last week totaling $2,757,171.15, according to the report of C. C. C. Stotler, secretary of the Title Guaranty Company.

Of these 60 were purchase money mortgages amounting to $278,067.74, and 446 were straight mortgages amounting to $2,479,103.41. The straight mortgages included 158 amounting to $1,218,904.00 to corporations, 179 amounting to $681,997.40 to building and loan associations, and 109 amounting to $578,202.01 to individuals.

MacDonald Secretary Quits London for U. S.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Sir Robert Van Sittart, the principal private secretary to Premier MacDonald, left London for the United States today.

Sir Robert traveled alone. It was stated that his visit was a private one and had no connection with the Premier's projected visit to discuss disarmament with President Hoover this autumn.

Austria Grabs Arms, Fascists Suspected

VIENNA, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—One hundred rifles, several machine guns and ammunition, alleged to be for use of the Austrian Fascisti, were seized today by the Austrian customs authorities.

Austrian liberal newspapers allege that both Fascists and Monarchists were involved in a conspiracy to seize a Danube River steamer and transport the armaments to a point near Linz. These arms and munitions, it is charged, were consigned to Prince Ruediger Von Starhemberg, leader of the Fascist organization Heinwehren, at Castle Waxemberg, near Linz.

Motorman Awarded Safe Driving Prize

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—J. G. Cole, motorman for the West Penn Railways Company, has completed two consecutive years of street car operation without an accident. He has received a cash award offered for such safety performances. E. R. Kooser, superintendent of transportation, announced similar prizes had been given E. J. Ready, of Uniontown, and J. L. Rose, of Fairchance, for going one year without an accident.

Naval Reservists Leave on Cruise

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Nine destroyers left the Philadelphia Navy Yard today, carrying 500 civilian sailors for two weeks' intensive training in gunnery, engineering, seamanship and naval tactics in waters up the Atlantic Coast to Maine and return. The 500 men represent divisions of the United States Naval Reserve from Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbia and Detroit.

WHEELS THAT GROUND BABY BROTHER

CRAWLS ON TRACKS—Stanley, Jr., 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rupienski, Versailles Borough, showing Frank, 10, Dorothy, 5, and Laura, 3, where their baby brother, Theodore, 15 months, was ground to death beneath the wheels of a Chicago flyer when he crawled across the B. & O. tracks to follow Stanley to the river.

TOT SEEKING PLAY KILLED

"Can I go swimming, Mom?"

Stanley Rupienski, 13, asked the question.

"Yes, but be careful," Mrs. Mary Rupienski, the mother, replied without looking up from her sewing in the drab little home bounded by a coal mine on one side and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad tracks on the other in Versailles Borough.

Theodore, a toddling lad of 15 months, looked up from the floor where he had been playing at his mother's feet. Nobody was paying any attention to him. His childish mind told him that to be with Stanley meant a good time.

FOLLOWS BROTHER

Stanley scampered across the tracks to the Youghiogheny River bank, where his playmates already were splashing about.

Theodore crawled to the door, down across the porch and started across the tracks. The engineer of the westbound Chicago flier saw the tot—but too late. The grinding wheels came to a screeching stop, drowning out the puny screams.

The saddened mother today recalled her baby's tragic end as she told of rushing to the door in wonder over the train's quick stop.

"TOO LATE"

"It was little Theodore," she sobbed. "His broken body lay at the side of the tracks and the train crew rushed him in to McKeesport, but he was dead before they picked him up."

Four children remain to the stricken mother.

"I have always been afraid something like this would happen," she sobbed. "Now it is too late."

Ohio Judge's Father Run Down by Auto

WHEELING, W. Va., Aug. 3.—J. B. Brennen, 72, Wheeling insurance man and father of Judge J. Harold Brennen, of the Ohio County Circuit Court, was probably fatally injured when he was run down by a motor truck while alighting from a trolley car at Highland Park last night. He suffered a fracture of both legs, one arm and internal injuries.

Austrian Army Captain to Hang For War Crime

Associated Press.

BELGRADE, JUGO-SLAVIA, Aug. 3.

THE long arm of the law reached out across 14 years and the wreck of an empire today to sentence Capt. Pirc, formerly of the Austrian Gendarmerie, to be hanged for shooting a Jugo-Slav farmer in 1915.

Capt. Pirc was shown by testimony to have shot the farmer, Marco Djilic, without trial, on suspicion of spying while the Austrian armies were occupying the northern part of Serbia in 1915. Djilic, while hunting for a lost horse, entered the Gerdarmes barracks where he was captured and shot by order of Pirc.

Djilic's relatives began immediately after the end of the war and the trial ended only recently. Capt. Pirc appealed from the decision.

DRIVER, WOMAN SLAIN ON ROAD

ANNISTON, Ala., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—The bodies of W. C. Gallahair, 60, taxi driver, and Mrs. Lucy Wilkerson, 39, of near Jacksonville, Ala., were found today on a deserted highway 12 miles from here.

The man apparently had been hacked to death with an ax, while the woman had been shot twice, once in the head and again through the heart. Gallahair's pistol, with one shell exploded, was found near his body.

The bodies were discovered after several hours' search by friends and relatives of the woman, whose husband, Lon Wilkerson, reported her missing from home since Friday morning. Physicians said the pair apparently had been dead 12 hours when they were found early today.

Hit-and-Run Driver Injures Three Girls

READING, Pa., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—A hit-and-run motorist struck three girls in the Tulpehocken Creek covered bridge northwest of the city, according to a report to police today, and fled without giving them assistance. They are in a hospital here. Elizabeth Brosch, 16, sustained a slight skull fracture. Elizabeth Maurer was seriously cut and bruised about the back and one knee, the third girl, Theresa Keller, being less badly hurt.

FREE BUS RIDES IN CITY PARKS

Free sight-seeing bus service is being furnished Sundays by the City of Pittsburgh in Schenley, Highland and Riverview Parks.

The buses, operated by the Pittsburgh Motor Coach Company, begin operating at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and run until 9 o'clock Sunday nights.

Two buses are in service in both Schenley and Highland Parks, operating on 10-minute schedules and one in Riverview Park on a half-hour schedule.

Service was inaugurated last Sunday by arrangement of the city with the motor coach company.

Child Dies; Denied Doctor's Aid By Kin

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., Aug. 3.—The death of a 3-months-old babe without the aid of medical attention was disclosed here when application was made for a burial permit for Joyce Meade, infant daughter of the Rev. J. T. Meade, minister of the Church of God of Princeton. At an inquest called by Coroner W. T. Bivens, the father testified that it was contrary to his religion to employ the aid of a doctor. Both he and his wife said they relied on prayers during the child's illness.

State to Seek Bid For 2 Fayette Roads

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Two road projects for northern Fayette County will be advertised by the State Highway Department this month. Engineers are completing a survey for new routes between Normalville, three miles east, and Indian Head, and also between Normalville and Ohiopyle. The new roads would provide outlets to the Indian Creek Valley, whose residents have waged a stiff fight for eight years to get "out of the mud."

Bee Keepers Plan Meeting August 17

MERCER, Pa., Aug. 3.—The Tri-County Bee Keepers' Association will hold its annual meeting at the apiary of John Heber, south of Franklin, Saturday, August 17. Charles N. Greene, chief apiary inspector, will be the speaker.

Two Families Left Homeless By Fires

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—Two families in this district are homeless today as a result of fires which levelled their homes yesterday. Loss is estimated at $8,000. While members of the John Taylor family, of Balsinger, were away from home, fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed their five-room frame dwelling. Fire consumed the home of William Gue at Hiller.

Blue Laws Don't Save Boys, Asserts Judge

YORK, Pa., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—"No boy was ever attracted to Sunday school by being driven from a ball game by a constable," said Judge Henry C. Niles this afternoon in an address at the homecoming celebration on the community playground at Shrewsbury. In his address he spoke of the futile efforts of an intolerant group to compel by force an obedience to law.

HOOVER'S NAVY ACTION TERMED LAW VIOLATION

Halting Construction Work On New Cruisers Scored By Swanson, Peace Aide.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES,
International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Evidence multiplied today that President Hoover is in for some rough handling when Congress reconvenes because of his arbitrary action in halting construction work on the new naval cruisers that Congress directed be laid down this year.

A sharp attack on the President's action was made today by Senator Swanson (Dem.), of Virginia, ranking minority member of the Foreign Relations Committee, who usually can be counted upon to support any and all moves looking toward disarmament or world peace. It was Swanson who helped Senator Borah pilot the Kellogg anti-war treaty through the Senate last spring, and who was singled out for special praise by Mr. Hoover when the treaty was proclaimed several weeks ago.

Swanson declared Mr. Hoover's action in stopping the cruisers a plain violation of the law, and he tartly reminded Mr. Hoover that in the matter of law observance the White House should lead the way.

POINTS OUT DUTY

"The President, under the Constitution, is to carry out the will of Congress and not to carry out his own will," Swanson said. "This is government law and the will of the President is subject to the law as much as the will of other citizens.

"There is too much disrespect for law in America and it behooves the President—especially when he has appointed a committee to study law enforcement—to obey the law himself. He would set a good example to the community if he should reconsider this matter and state that he will proceed to construct the three cruisers as directed unless Congress should repeal the direction given him."

Moreover, the Virginia senator expressed the opinion that Mr. Hoover has not furthered an Anglo-American naval agreement by stopping work on the new cruisers.

BRITAIN'S ATTITUDE

"It emphasizes," Swanson said, "the impression held by Great Britain that the United States has no intention of building the cruisers and all that Great Britain has to do is to delay matters, while she negotiates to keep the present status which gives her navy an overwhelming superiority over ours.

"When Great Britain realizes that America is firmly determined to have a navy substantially equal to the British navy, then and not until then will an agreement be reached."

Swanson called attention to London dispatches stating that England has no intention of scrapping cruisers or reducing her present navy in order to reach parity with the United States.

"If this is true," he said, "the 15 cruisers provided for (the three-year program ordered by congress) will still keep our navy inferior to Great Britain."

NAVAL BASES CITED

Any diminution in the size of capital ships, as discussed in London between Ambassador Dawes and Premier MacDonald also will react to the British advantage, Swanson pointed out, because of Britain's far-flung naval bases.

"If these suggestions are carried out, the American Navy would be a poor second to the British navy," Swanson declared. "The best interests of the United States and Great Britain and the peace of the world would be accomplished by substantial equality of the American and British navies.

"Since the protection of commerce is dependent upon cruisers we must have parity in cruisers. The sea-borne commerce of the United States amounts to $19,000,000,000 a year, which is rapidly increasing, and the American people demand this vast commerce, inseparable from their prosperity, shall be protected by a navy second to none."

Hoover Refuses Slayer Clemency

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—President Hoover has refused the clemency plea of James H. Alderman, sentenced to hang August 17 for the killing of two coast guardsmen near Fort Lauderdale, Fla., in 1927, it was announced today. Alderman is held in a Florida jail.

AUTO IN NORTH SIDE CRASH GOES 'ROLLING,' TWO GIRLS PINNED BENEATH ESCAPE

DOUBLE SOMERSAULT—Three people, including the driver and owner, Martin Lawless, 22, 1218 Irwin avenue, were sent rolling when this car did what was described as a "double somersault" in a crash in Beech avenue.

3 HURT AS CAR SOMERSAULTS

When two automobiles crashed on Beach avenue, North Side, Saturday, one of the machines did a double-somersault and pinned its three occupants beneath when it finally came to rest.

A fourth person, driver of the second car, was uninjured, while two women and a man in the somersaulting machine were pinned beneath it as it rolled over. They suffered only slight injuries.

The car that turned over was driven by Martin Lawless, 22, of 1218 Irwin avenue, and with him were Patsy Callahan, 18, of 610 Sampson street and Bonna Oldaker, 20, of 2015 Gironda street. They were treated at the office of Dr. Horace Ritter, 853 Beech avenue, opposite the scene of the wreck. They were able to go to their homes.

Dr. J. W. Ildza, 50, of 3448 Brighton road, driver of the other car, was uninjured. Both drivers were arrested on charges of reckless driving.

'EAST LIBERTY DAY' AUGUST 27

"East Liberty Day" means more than this name implies, declares George B. Hess, general chairman of the committee in charge of the annual outing of the East Liberty Chamber of Commerce. The outing, to be held August 27, is not confined merely to members of the Chamber of Commerce or their families, but it is open to every one in the eastern end of Allegheny County, Hess said.

George B. Hess

L. S. Will, general chairman of the prize committee, reported this week that hundreds of prizes will be on hand for the winners of the various events. Thousands of novelties will be distributed to children and grownups during the day in Highland Park where the outing will be held.

The affair is the annual basket picnic of the business group and is enlivened by games in the afternoon for the children and a water regatta in the lake in the evening. Another feature arranged this year will enable visitors to the park to see themselves in the local movie houses a short time later. A. C. MacCumbee, chairman of the moving picture committee, has made arrangements for movies to be made of the gathering.

The athletic and acquatic program is being rapidly completed by Paul E. Taylor, chairman of the committee, who said there will be hundreds of prizes for the events.

Obituary

George V. Campbell.

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—George W. Campbell, 76, secretary and treasurer of the Etna-Connellsville Coke Company and former member of the Pennsylvania legislature, died this afternoon at his home here. Mr. Campbell served in the Legislature the terms of 1889 and 1897. He was elected five times as delegates to Republican State Conventions. He was former editor and publisher of the Springfield Mountaineer. He served several terms as postmaster of Normalville and was engaged in the mercantile business there for a quarter of a century. He was the oldest member of King Solomon Lodge of Masons of this city.

'FIGHTING 10TH' HOLDS REUNION

WASHINGTON, Pa., Aug. 3.—Approximately 300 surviving members of the "Fighting Tenth" Pennsylvania Infantry, which served in the Philippines during the Spanish-American War, returned here today for the thirtieth annual reunion.

One of the features was a parade at noon, the procession being headed by the Drum and Bugle Corps of Edwin Scott Linton Post No. 175. The streets were thronged and buildings bedecked with flags.

Col. James E. Barnett, of this city, who was in command of the Tenth Pennsylvania Regiment when it returned from the islands, succeeding Col. A. L. Hawkins, who died on the transport en route home, delivered the address of welcome at a formal session in the Washington Armory.

The reunion next year will be held at Greensburg. Officers elected were as follows: President, Col. Richard Coulter, Greensburg, who also served in the World War in charge of the port of Le Havre and began his military career as a private in the Spanish-American War; first vice president, Judge C. D. Copeland; second vice president, Judge W. T. Dom; secretary, I. K. Porter, and treasurer, Thomas Barkley.

Other prominent members among the survivors of the historic regiment, now the One Hundred and Tenth Infantry, Twenty-eighth Division, are Gen. Edward Martin, state treasurer, who served as a private; Controller Robert G. Woodside, Pittsburgh, and Col. Clyde E. Hawkins, U. S. A., retired, son of Col. A. L. Hawkins, who commanded the regiment.

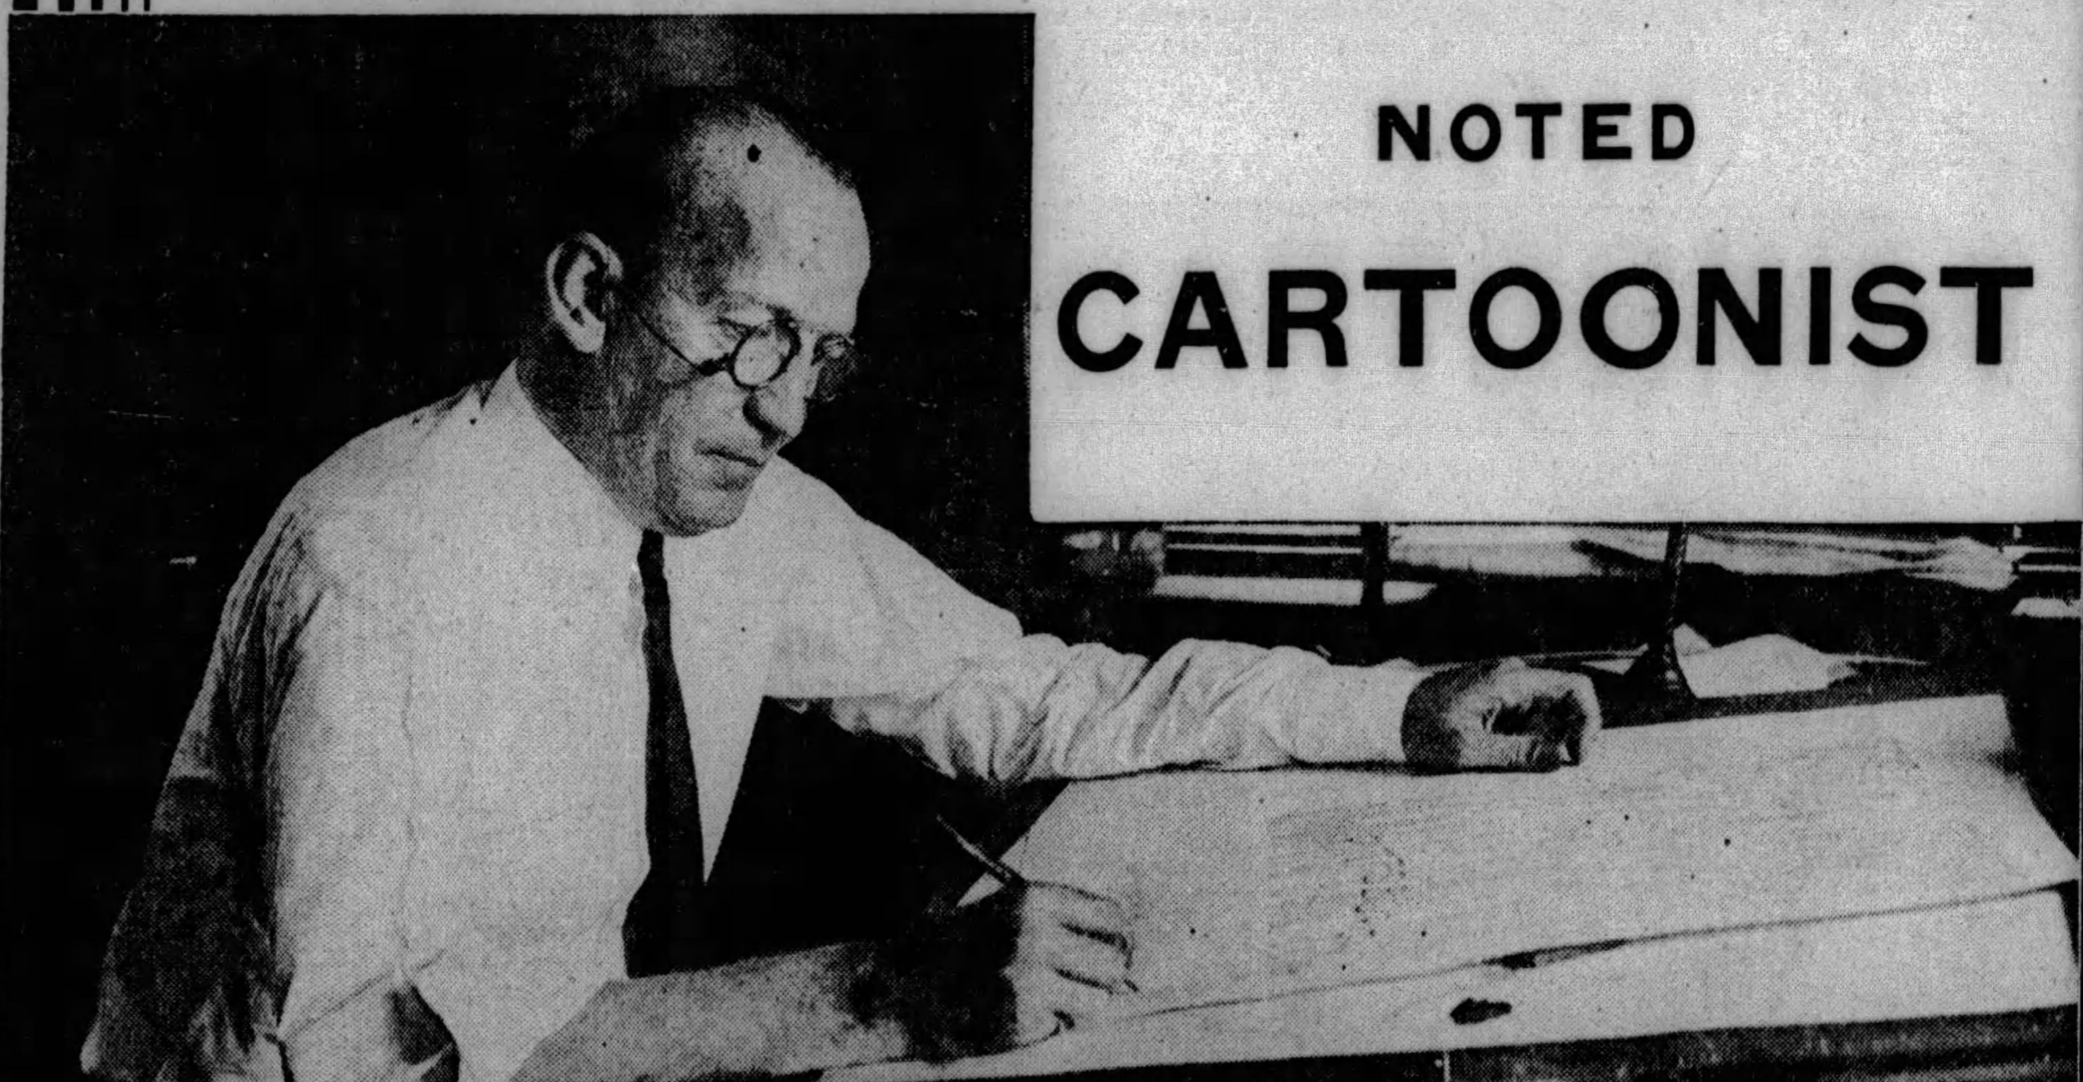
BARNESVILLE, O., Aug. 3.—Three youths who went to Summerfield, where they picked up three members of the fair sex found out that the male youth of the village did not like the idea. The car—one of the collegiate flivver variety—was liberally bespattered with eggs.

QUIN HALL

NOTED CARTOONIST



QUIN HALL, famous cartoonist of King Features Syndicate, New York City, has joined the staff of the Sun-Telegraph. Now the life of Pittsburgh, its glories and its foibles, its deeds and its delinquencies will be pictured in a series of brilliant cartoons by this noted comic artist.

Mr. Hall was born in Lacon, Ill., studied human nature there and set type on a local newspaper. From there he went to the Oklahoma City Times as a reporter. The Editor discovered he could draw and gave him his start as a cartoonist. Chicago was his next stopping off place, where he studied in the Academy of Fine Arts and afterwards was with the Chicago Daily News and the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Hall illustrated Ring Lardner's column and collaborated with J. P. McEvoy, author of "Show Girl."

But it is in cartoons that Mr. Hall excels and it is with them that he has made countless millions smile. And now Pittsburghers and all readers of the Sun-Telegraph are to enjoy his humor.

How Daily Dose of Kruschen Makes You Lose Unhealthy Fat

Yet Gives You Splendid Health and Added Energy

It sounds easy, doesn't it?—well, it is the easiest, the safest and surest way to lose fat you could possibly desire!

KRUSCHEN SALTS—a perfect combination of the six mineral salts your body must have every day to function properly—purify your blood of harmful acids, aid the kidneys and bowels to throw off waste material (the continual formation of which is probably the cause of your fat). They are carried by your blood stream to give stimulus, life and new activity to every nerve, gland and body organ.

In this modern age of living, it's impossible to get these salts from the fancy food you eat—but don't worry just as long as you have KRUSCHEN SALTS.

RACE PROMOTER UNABLE TO PAY HIS EMPLOYES

Labor Commissioner Issues Warrant on Complaint of Entertainers and Police.

Jim Thorpe Latest to File Claim Against Sponsor of Cross-Country Derby.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Deputy Labor Commissioner M. E. Richardson today instructed the city prosecutor to issue a warrant for the arrest of C. C. Pyle, promoter of the transcontinental bunion derby. Pyle failed to pay $1,000 towards claims for wages made against him by entertainers and patrolmen who accompanied the runners on the long trek from New York to Los Angeles.

C. C. Pyle

When the promoter appeared at the Labor Commission office he was greeted by a milling crowd of claimants, including many of the runners, who were to have participated in the $60,000 prizes.

Richardson spoke to Pyle alone, and a moment later told newspaper men, "It is no use. Pyle said he didn't have a thin dime. I informed him, therefore, I will ask for his arrest the first thing Monday morning."

Tuesday Pyle sent from Santa Rosa, Cal., $500 to be applied on claims allowed by the commission, which totaled $1,500. At the same time Jim Thorpe, noted Indian athlete, filed an additional claim for $1,000.

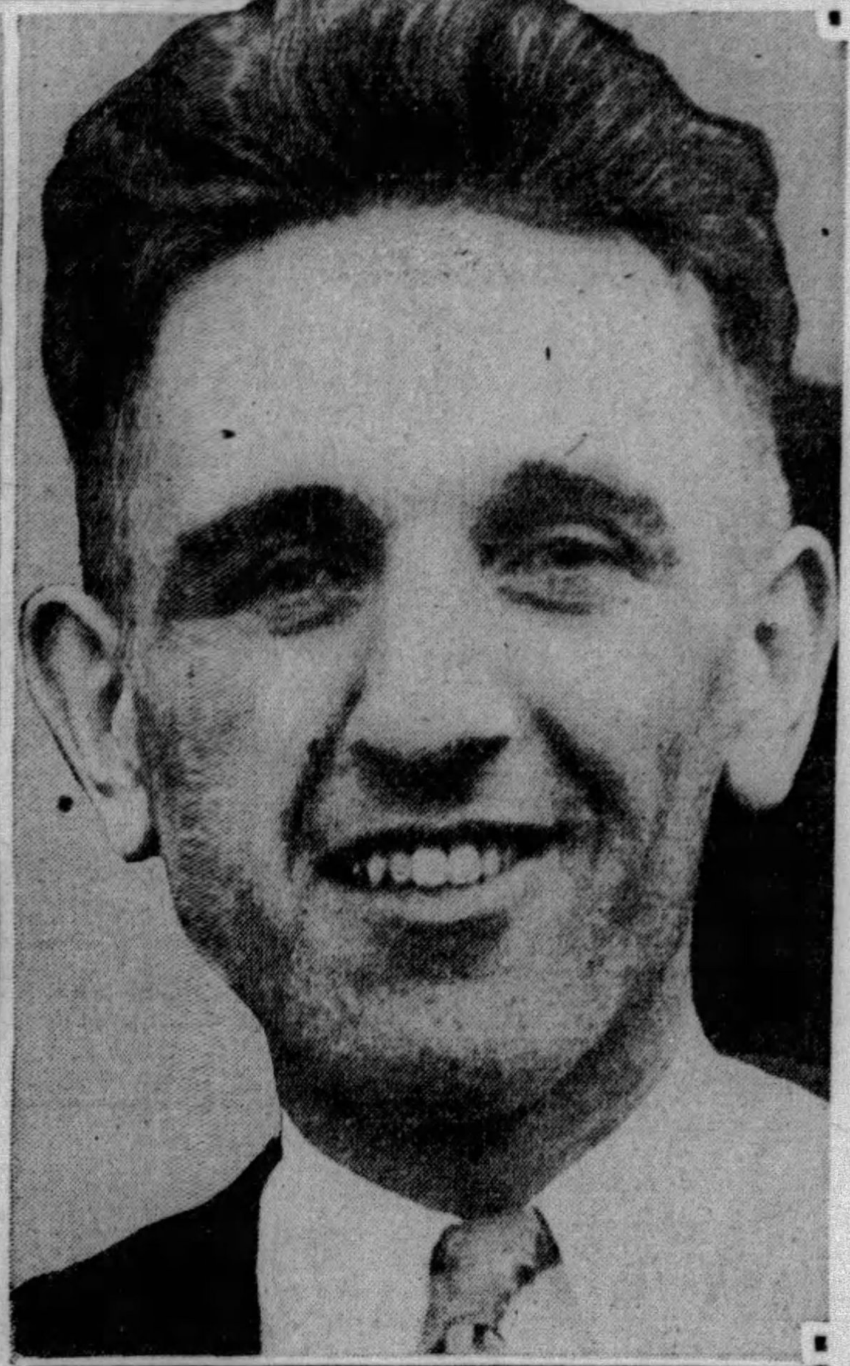
IRON SHOT—One of the best features of Kauffmann's play is his work with the iron clubs. Here he is seen following through on a pitch-and-run shot.



CHAMPION—Smile of the champion, who will defend his laurels against 143 other players, representing 35 cities. Incidentally, Pittsburgh also will seek the team championship for the third successive year. C. J. Lunden, Bob Graham, Earl Wessell, Red Barr and Mike Galido will fight with Kauffmann to retain the Harding Cup, emblematic of that honor.

Blue Larkspur Lost To Turf for Season

Crack 3-Year-Old Racer Suffers Ruptured Tendon Sheath in Workout at Saratoga.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Blue Larkspur, 3-year-old champion of the E. R. Bradley stables, was scratched today and probably for at least the balance of the season after trainers found themselves unable to put him in shape for the Miller Stakes, scheduled for today. He ruptured the sheath of a tendon yesterday morning while being worked out by Johnny Maiben.

Blue Larkspur is reported to have earned $220,420 in the 13 races in which he has been entered. He was scheduled for three stake engagements here, the Miller, Travers and Seneca.

A's, Browns Play 8-8 Tie; Chisox Wallop Red Sox

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—In a race against rain at Shibe Park today, the Athletics tied up the first game of a double-header with the Browns in the eighth inning just before a downpour made further play impossible. A triple by Mule Haas and Al Simmons' fourth single gave the Mackmen the run which deadlocked the game at 8 to 8. The A's now must play double-headers against the Browns on Monday and Tuesday.

The visitors hammered Mose Grove out of the box under a barrage of six hits and four runs in the first. The home forces trailed until Simmons' final-round blast against John Ogden, who had relieved Sam Gray in the seventh, after Jimmy Foxx hit his twenty-fourth home run with two on base.

Nearly 30,000 fans braved a drizzle to see the uphill fight of the Athletics. Blue hit a homer for St. Louis in the seventh, helping the visitors into a lead of 8 to 4, which fell under the blows of Foxx and Simmons. The score:

Rain Gives Ailing Bucs, Giants Rest

Postponement to Be Played Off as Part of Doubleheader September 11.

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.

A PENETRATING, consistent rain prevented the first game of the series between the Pirates and Giants, scheduled at Forbes Field Saturday afternoon.

The postponement will be played off as part of a double-header on Wednesday, September 11, it was announced by the Pirate management.

Approximately 8,000 fans passed through the Forbes Field entrances on the threatening afternoon before the showers fell. The rain held off until the Pirates were indulging in their fielding practice 20 minutes before starting time.

Umpire-in-Chief Charles Rigler conferred with the management a few minutes before the contest was scheduled to start. The rain growing in intensity, the official was instructed to refrain from play. After a contest is started the matter of play is under the authority of the umpires.

NO CHANCE TO PLAY

The officials did not make any mistake in calling off the much-wanted contest. Fifteen minutes after the decision was made, the showers grew in fury, soaking the field and holding many in the ball park.

Both clubs were prepared to stage the initial contest with stars on the bench. George Grantham and Burleigh Grimes are still unable to appear in the Pirate cast, while the Giants have several sick performers including Third Baseman Fred INJURED—Blue Larkspur, one of the crack 3-year-olds of the year, which may be lost to racing for the remainder of the season as a result of a ruptured tendon sheath, suffered during a workout. The animal was scratched from the Miller Stakes at Saratoga Saturday when the extent of the injury became known.

CARLSON HURLS BRUINS TO WIN OVER BROOKLYN

Manager McKechnie Chased By Umps As Cardinals Defeat the Braves, 7 to 5.

Johnny Gooch's Double in Ninth Brings Reds 2-1 Triumph Over Phillies.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The Cubs increased their lead over the Pirates to six full games by defeating Brooklyn, 12 to 2, in the series opener here today, as the Buccaneers were idle in a Pittsburgh rainstorm. The Bruins pounded three Robin pitchers for 15 hits and drew steadily away from the visitors. Hal Carlson gave four passes, but so scattered eight hits that Brooklyn never was in the running. A home run by Babe Herman in the fifth accounted for one of the Brooklyn runs. Kiki Cuyler drove in four runs with two singles. The score:

CARDS VICTORS

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Concentrating their attack in the first two innings, the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Boston Braves 7 to 5 in the first of a four-game series here today. The Braves outhit the Cardinals 15 to 11.

Manager Bill McKechnie, of the Red Birds, was banished from the field in the third inning after protesting a decision at the plate. Wilson, Cardinal catcher, also was sent to the showers.

Andy High was shifted to second base when Frankie Frisch reported sick. Johnny Butler went to third for the Cards. Lester Bell dropped a home run into the right field

Kauffmann In Practic[e]

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 3.—(INS.)—A[r]riving for the national public lin[ks] golf tournament, which begins he[re] next Tuesday, Carl F. Kauffman[n] of Pittsburgh, present champi[on] and twice winner of the event, engaged in preliminary practice tod[ay] in preparation for the tourname[nt].

Kauffmann arrived yesterday, [ac]companied by S. J. Lunden, also [a] member of the Pittsburgh tea[m] which twice has won the War[ren] G. Harding cup, given to the sq[uad] of four golfers having the low[est] scores in the two 18-hole qualify[ing] rounds.

Kauffmann Primed to Defend National Golf Title

THIRD CROWN IN ROW AIM OF LOCAL STAR

Carl Set to Meet Big Test Over St. Louis Municipal Course This Week.

City's Team to Fight to Keep Warren Harding Cup After Winning It Twice.

By VERN SWARTSFAGER.

PITTSBURGH again holds the National limelight on the eve of the National public links golf championship, which is to be held in St. Louis from Tuesday to Saturday. From one end of the country to the other, golfers will be watching the pride of Schenley Park's municipal links, Carl F. Kauffmann, who has captured the National title for two years in a row, and now hopes to annex it a third time and thereby establish a record. They are also interested in Pittsburgh's strong squad which will defend the Warren G. Harding Cup, emblematic of the National team championship which Pittsburgh has also won for the last two years, as well as in the result of the play between Philadelphia, Erie and Pittsburgh in their annual fight for the Joseph Horne Cup, emblematic of the state championship, which is now held by the Philadelphia boys.

CARL CONFIDENT

Kauffmann, considered one of the finest golfers in the country, was quite confident of returning again with his national laurels before he left for the scene of action last Wednesday. He has been practicing over the championship course daily, and it is reported he is ready to meet the test against the field of 143 other star muny linkers representing 35 cities throughout the country.

It would be hard to find a stronger match player in public links golf than the modest Carl. His medal, to be sure, shows skill in performance—but match play is his forte. He is virtually an iron man; he can be down, counted out, and come back with such steadiness that those who watch him marvel, nothing less. If he qualifies in the 36-hole test, Tuesday and Wednesday, Kaufmann should easily retain his championship and again bring to Pittsburgh its only National title.

The other members of Pittsburgh's team, C. J. Lunden, Tex Wessell, R. G. (Red) Barr, Bob Graham and Mike Galido, are at St. Louis now awaiting the gong. The team is accompanied by Kenneth C. Witherow, district member of the U. S. G. A. public links committee, who is in charge of the party. Bernie McFarland, well-known engineer-golfer, made the team, but was forced to forego playing in the championship because he could not leave his work.

There are only a few outstanding players aside from Kauffmann who stand a chance of menacing his title, and these include Mike Surmiak, of Philadelphia; Andy Cusick, of Little Rock, Ark; Jimmy McAuliffe, of Buffalo, former champion; Joe Banko, of Cleveland, and Frank Aylward, of Kansas City.

TOURNEY AT SOUTH HILLS

Golf in Pittsburgh will be practically at a standstill this week as a result of the National tournament, only few minor local affairs being on the books.

The first one-day tournament of the Pennsylvania Golf Association will be staged at the South Hills Country Club on Wednesday. In the morning 18 holes medal play under full handicaps will be played and in the afternoon, 18 holes four ball match play against par, handicaps to be applied as in play against par, will be held. Low net and low gross prizes for each event will be awarded.

Other Pennsylvania Golf Association tournaments have been listed for Monday, August 26, at the Kahkwa Club, in Erie; Wednesday, September 11, at the Pittsburgh Field Club, and Wednesday, October 9, at the Hannastown Golf Club.

The tourney at the Pittsburgh Field Club conflicts in date with the invitation tournament slated for the Chartiers Heights Country Club. And the October 9 tourney at Hannastown may interfere with the World Series in baseball.

On Thursday, the Women's Golf Association of Western Pennsylvania will hold a one-day affair at the Montour Heights Country Club.

The Laundrymen's Golf Association will play on Thursday at the Shannopin Country Club, according to Dick Briny.

BIG FIELD AT BEDFORD

A number of local amateurs and professionals are at the Bedford Springs Golf Club today—some of them to compete in the pro-amateur tourney now in progress, others to play in the 36-hole professionals' event Monday, and still others to participate in the four-day invitation amateur tourney which gets under way on Tuesday.

Bedford Springs' course, at its best right now, will be the real center for district activity throughout the week.

On Tuesday, Jimmy Devlin, professional at the Nemacolin Country Club, who is open champion of Porto Rico and one of the best-liked golfers in Western Pennsylvania, will show his prowess with a trick-shot exhibition.

Arthur Goss, Bedford Springs professional, will direct the tournament. Post-entries, it is understood, will be received.

At this time, we cannot praise too highly the smoothness with which the annual invitation tournament at the Stanton Heights Golf Club was directed last week. It was the best affair of the sort given in many years in this section, and verily had a championship field. Fred B. Weppner, W. P. G. A. executive committeeman, who was in charge of the tourney, is to be complimented upon his fine work.

The Hotel, Club and Restaurant Golf Association will hold a one-day tournament at the St. Clair Country Club on Tuesday, according to Harry Kramer, president, and Charley Schmidt, secretary.

Homer C Drake, registrar for the New Castle Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, has announced a tournament for members and eligible members to the S. A. R. to be held at the New Castle Field Club on Friday, August 22. All members of the Pennsylvania society, including the Pittsburgh chapter, are invited to play. Those wishing further information may communicate with Drake at New Castle.

Col. Franklin Blackstone, chairman of the National Society golf committee, has announced that a new sort of driving contest will be held in connection with the state S. A. R. tournament at the Pittsburgh Field Club on September 9. It will be economical so far as time is concerned, for very little will be lost.

Col. Blackstone's idea is a good one. He will have measurements taken of all drives on the first, third and fifth holes at the Pittsburgh Field Club during the tournament, and these will be totalled and the winner named therefrom. In that way, everyone gets a chance, whether he figures himself a long driver or not.

On August 15, the Oakmont Country Club will stage its mixed foursome invitation tournament, and it is going to be a big affair. Starting times and dinner reservations will be allotted after Monday, August 12, on which day they will be made through the Women's Golf Committee at Oakmont.

YOUNG STARS IN MAINE

Knox M. Young, Jr., of the Highland Country Club, has just returned from Portland, Me., where he took Karl Mosser, to the nineteenth hole before he was beaten in the final of the Maine amateur championship. Mosser is credited with being a real veteran, having beaten such stars in his time as Jess Guilford and others. Knox is playing at the top of his game, and Highland members are proud of his showing in New England.

The Greensburg Country Club announces the first annual amateur golf championship of Westmoreland County, to be held August 22 to 24, at that links. Richard Coulter is president of Greensburg. L. B. Smith is chairman of the tournament committee, assisted by John Barclay, Jr., P. A. Bartholomew, Paul Ewer, James F. Giffen, Jr., L. G. Heller, J. F. Luttrell, E. B. Moore, J. R. Walthour and A. K. Wood.

Perry Delvecchio, pro at Greensburg, is receiving entries from members of clubs of Westmoreland County who are affiliated with member-clubs of the Western Pennsylvania Golf Association. The entry fee is $5.00, and the entry list closes August 19.

A big dinner dance on August 24 will wind up this new and interesting championship tourney.

GRIMES FAR FROM READY

Burleigh Grimes and George Grantham were all set in civilian clothes to watch the Saturday game when the play was halted. Grimes made a statement relative to his hand injury that does not carry much comfort to Donie Bush and the fans. Burleigh said he did not think he would be able to pitch inside of two weeks.

Burleigh's damaged thumb is swollen and discolored. The ace is beginning to get the use of the important member, but he cannot grip the ball sufficiently to get anything on it, and take it from any pitcher, the slab is No-Man's-Land these days if you haven't got something on the "old apple."

Grantham probably will be able to go to his post in a week. George's return will cause Bush to do some pondering regarding first base. In the event that the Keystone is guarded properly by Stewie Clarke and Dick Bartell, Bush might be constrained to switch George back to the gateway post.

Meantime, Rollie Hemsley probably will continue under the bat. The brilliant athlete from down the old Ohio looks like one of the best young receivers the game has seen in many years.

HARRIS IS VISITOR

A welcome visitor to the press box during the rain hold-up was Joe Harris, former star of the Pirates, who was forced out of play for the season on account of gall-stone attack and other disorders that doubtless are the result of Harris' terrible experience in France. Joe is getting specialist treatment and is doing better than holding his own.

Harris is convinced that the woods is full of doughboys who are suffering from gas and one thing or another that did not get in their damage until 10 years after the war ended.

Joe and Ira Flagstead have been close friends for many years. Harris avers that when Ira was with the Tigers and Red Sox he was one of the classiest outfielders in the game and he thinks that the veteran will help the cause of the Buccos if he is anywhere close to his old form.

The slump of the Giants is not reflected in the army of journalists who landed here with the club. The departing Quakers didn't have a single Philadelphia scribe to sing their praises, but the Giants have a group of 10 writers.

BOTH CLUBS IDLE

The Pirates and Giants were free to ramble Sunday, neither club having an exhibition game, and it is just as well with many sick and injured on each squad.

The Pirates have only five more games on their home slate before they hit the trail on their third and last Eastern excursion. After finishing up with the Giants on Wednesday, the Buccos will take on the Cardinals Thursday and Friday.

Bill McKechnie is sure to receive a warm welcome when he brings his beloved Red Birds to the Oakland orchard Thursday. The Cardinals have been doing much better since Bill returned to take up the reins of leadership.

Bob Veach Released

TOLEDO, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Bob Veach, star of Toledo in the American Association for three years, has been released by the Mudhens. He was given his outright release at once, making it possible for him to negotiate with other clubs for a berth, either as player or manager. He formerly was a star with the Detroit Tigers.

Jack Barclay defeated Paul Euwer, 2 and 1. J. F. Luttrell defeated another favorite in L. G. Heller, 2 and 1. Sid Carson was the winner over W. G. Griffith 4 and 3.

In the regular event, medal play under 7-8 handicap J. F. Luttrell was first with a score of 74-5-69. Second place went to J. E. Waddell, 84-11-73. E. W. Booz was third with a card of 83-8-75. Other good scores of the day were: J. B. Orr, 89-12-77; T. R. Crook, 96-18-78; L. G. Heller, 79-1-78; L. B. Smith, 79-1-78; J. R. Walthour, 91-12-79; A. P. Moore, 89-10-79; H. L. Anderson, 101-21-80.

HANNASTOWN

T. S. Jamison, of Greensburg, won the club championship event, playing in the first eight and defeating D. Beattie, 6 up and 5 to go. In the second eight, W. M. Berlin defeated W. F. Euwer, one up. Euwer had a hole in one during the play on a 220-yard drive. In the third eight, M. J. Wogelmuth defeated George Taylor, one up. In the fourth eight, George Meyer won from T. Biehell, one up.

Dawson to Stage Horse Exhibition

DAWSON, Pa., Aug. 3.—That motorized locomotion has not completely supplanted horses in popular favor is evidenced by Supt. Harold Blancey who announced that arrangements are being made for a big exhibit of horses with substantial prizes offered at the coming Dawson fair, which opens September 17. Austin E. Livingston will aid Supt. Blancey in arranging the equine show.

W. Va. Squad Gets Orders

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Aug. 3.—The advent of the month of August, and the suggestion of football that has been in the air the last few days, brought forth today the first official news of the West Virginia University football squad to the effect that the varsity would begin its preliminary training at Jacksons Mill, near Weston, on the first day of September.

September 1 falls on a Sunday, and there will be no work, of course, on this day, but the 40 or more candidates who are to be invited to the camp will be required to be on hand for the evening meal on this date, so that work will begin with the sunrise on the following morning, and continue twice daily during the two weeks to be spent at Jacksons Mill.

Cumberland Race Meet Is Popular

BALTIMORE, Aug. 3.—It begins to look as if Cumberland, which opens Maryland's fall racing season on August 26, will be unable to accommodate every horseman, unless extra stalls are built between now and the opening of the meeting.

Race Secretary Edward Brennan received word today from Uncle Jim Arthur, a local horseman, who is doing missionary work in Canada on behalf of the Cumberland meeting, that he expected to ship 200 horses out of Canada bound for the upstate session the middle of next month.

PRESENT LEAD NOT TOO BIG FOR A'S PILOT

Connie Mack Won't Feel Easy Until Athletics Have Pennant Sewed Up.

Admits Club Is in Excellent Position to Capture First Flag Since 1914.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The scene was in the dugout of the Athletics, now somewhat widely regarded as the heirs-apparent to the American League crown.

Said one of the younger players, after the A's had just reeled off nine runs in a single inning against the Tigers:

"This takes all the kick out of the game for me. There isn't much to worry about with that lead."

Quickly responded the veteran chieftain of the tribe, Connie Mack:

"I won't feel easy until we have about twice as big a lead. You can't tell nowadays when the other club may break out with nine runs or more. You boys keep hustling in there and get all you can."

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

Thus times have changed for the grand old man of the A's since the days when it was considered a good day's work to pull a flock of inside stuff to give Chief Bender, Eddie Plank or Jack Coombs a two-run lead to work on. Usually that was enough, anything over four runs was considered ironclad.

Now, adds Eddie Collins, a Mack star in the old days and a first lieutenant under the old master in the new, consider the contrast:

"Going into the last two innings the other day our big star, Lefty Grove, had a 4-1 lead, only to have the game tied up in the ninth. If that can happen to our best bet, think what a difference there is in the scoring possibilities.

"You may have noticed we have had the Indian sign on Washington this year. One day they had a big lead on us, six or seven runs. Suddenly our boys began connecting, they bagged eight runs in an inning. We won the game and Walter Johnson threw up his hands. Walter probably would have retired if he had lost so big an advantage in old days."

THINKS BALL SAME

It isn't so much that there is any change in the ball itself. In fact, Mack clings to the belief that essentially there is little, if any, difference in the liveliness of the ball. Connie does not subscribe to the jackrabbit theory. Rather, he thinks the new hitting freedom is due to the big increase in the number of balls used during any game.

"Why, just think," declared Connie, "in the old days we usually went through a game with three or four balls at the most. We would wait for them to be returned if they went into the stands or even out of the park. The ball became discolored quickly, but was kept in play. Now, if either the batter or pitcher has the slightest objection, a new ball is thrown out at once by the umpire, the batter has a bright target, and it's become the rule to take a good, healthy swing at it.

"On the other hand, you see some great pitching, even with the injection of so many fresh balls and the restrictions imposed on the pitchers.

"Grove, Walberg and Earnshaw all are pitching much better ball than before. Grove especially has hit his best stride, mainly because he now understands the batters better and pitches to their weaknesses. During his first two or three years with us, Grove relied mostly on throwing the ball past the batters. He worked too hard and lost effectiveness by bearing down. Now he takes it easier, has better control and studies the batters closely. He mixes 'em up more instead of relying on speed alone.

"Walberg, although he also has great speed, employs a change of pace and variety of delivery even more than Grove."

Quite naturally, there is a distinct air of confidence in the camp of the Athletics, although Connie Mack is too old a campaigner to take anything for granted in baseball. Furthermore, Connie has had too many disappointments in the past few years to let his team become overconfident because it has run up a lead that seems impregnable.

ADMITS ADVANTAGE

"Of course we have a big advantage now," admitted Connie. "Our position is much different from that of last year, when we were doing the chasing. Our team has gone along steadily, losing no more than two successive games at any time. Yet we cannot afford to take any chances, with two months to go. I always regard the Yankees as dangerous, but the very fact that we have beaten the champions in a majority of the games against them so far has given our team added confidence. I am very proud of the boys."

Pitt, Tech Buy Cover to Keep Gridiron Dry

PITT and Carnegie Tech have jointly purchased a field cover for the Stadium gridiron. Director of Athletics W. Don Harrison, of Pitt, and Graduate Manager Clarence Overend, of Carnegie, yesterday ordered the new cover from Howard Ehmke, Detroit manufacturer, and one of Connie Mack's pitching aces.

The cover will be composed of six sections of 12-ounce waterproof and mildew-proof canvas. Each section will be 90 by 130 feet in size, and the overall dimensions will be 180 feet by 390 feet. The cover will insure dry footing for all games.

Ehmke has furnished covers to Harvard, Chicago, Purdue, California, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Soldier Field, Chicago, and to all the major league baseball parks. Ehmke will be here next month to supervise the work of laying the cover on the field.

Craftsmanship at Trussell's

There is more to repairing shoes than merely putting on new leather—Trussell believes that the same care should be taken in rebuilding as the manufacturer puts into making. For instance, every stitch is removed before new ones are put in. Such careful skill and quality of leather mean that you are getting the absolute best in repairing. Try Trussell.

Close Races Mark Fights for Sandlot Laurels

TEAMS BUNCHED AS LOOPS NEAR END OF SEASON

Withdrawal of Inter-County League Clubs Leaves Circuit Campact Group.

Commercial and Industrial League Stages Interesting Battle for Championship.

By TOM BIRKS.

WELL-BALANCED races are still the vogue in Western Pennsylvania's sandlot baseball leagues. The Inter-County, City, West Penn, Central and Commercial and Industrial loops, as the leading circuits in the district, all flash close races as the clubs head into the home stretch.

Fandom following the fortunes of the Inter-County League hardly was surprised when Butler withdrew from the circuit. They hardly figured that Butler could stand the gaff of a heavy traveling schedule, and then the club itself is a poor drawing card for the other teams in the league.

COMPACT GROUP

So now Beaver Falls, Natrona and Butler have gone from the loop, leaving the other clubs, with the exception of Canonsburg, a compact group. Very little interest is being manifest since it is apparent that the great Homewood Club can win the pennant at will, and thus repeat its first-half triumph.

One of the best sandlot races in the district is being flashed in the Commercial and Industrial League. Gimbels are leading the parade ahead of Reick-McJunkin, Horne and Carnegie Steel nines. Many fans feel the Gimbels, with four victories, should cop the second half. The base of this deduction comes from the fact that Reicks and Carnegie Steel, their closest rivals, meet each other twice, and naturally someone has to lose.

Kaufmanns are playing little part in the second half race. Manager Donovan is having tough sledding getting a team on the field, and outside of the Horne game at Camp Horne, it is hard to say just when the Big Store boys will get out on the diamond.

Had the Gimbel nine defeated Reicks last Tuesday at Garfield Park, the second half race would have been over. However, Laboon was in wonderful form, and the W. O. W. star let Gimbels down with three hits. Then the Gimbel infield booted the ball all over the lot, and the boys, led by Stuhlfire, took full advantage of the errors to put the game on ice.

VERONA UNDEFEATED

Verona Community is still undefeated in the West Penn League, but Bill Bright's outfit had a narrow escape on Thursday when the Universal nine held the Community to a 2-2 score. Universal went into that battle all pepped up, trying to avenge the first-half playoff game. And McKeag's outfit tied the battle with a home run in the last frame.

Powley still is keeping in the limelight, hitting the ball hard and twirling a great game. Verona's wonderful offensive was flashed at Murraysville Wednesday evening. Geiger's club got away to a four-run lead in the opening inning. McNally feeling the weight of the Murraysville bats. Then the Verona wrecking crew swung into action and Shannon was shelled from the mound.

Export rather upset the dope on the previous evening by stopping Pete Elder's North Bessemer club at Pete's home grounds. When North Bessemer and Export meet things happen fast, and that game was no exception.

Stowe Civics received a severe jolt during the week in the City League race. Book Shoe kept up its reputation of being the Stowe nemesis. And the Shoe boys bumped off the Stowe aggregation twice, Jiggers Welch pitching both games. Welch, as a convert from an infielder to the pitching staff, is certainly having plenty of success. Welch pitched some years ago, and then coming back to the Pittsburgh district with the Hermes-Grove nine, played second base. Pop Geer probably is wishing that he had been kept at the Keystone sack, for those two defeats will hurt the Rox in the second half battle. Stowe only dropped two games in the whole first-half schedule and Pleasant Valley probably will take advantage of the Stowe lapse.

Book Shoe has some wonderful material in the second half race, which sets fans wondering just why the Shoe boys are not leading the league.

The Central loop should be the tightest sandlot second half race in the district. East Liberty Red Sox, W. O. W., the Roosevelt club, J. J. Boyles and the Mt. Washington Catholic Men's Club are fighting hard, and what is more, all are getting beaten.

FANS CONFIDENT

South Hills enthusiasts feel the Roosevelt club will win the second half fight. Lutton's club bumped off the Boyles on Thursday, and that put a crimp into the Frazier street boys. East Liberty Red Sox are leading the race and Hoechstedder, getting a full team out for the balance of the season, should win the second half.

Hoechstedder has the same trouble as many other managers in the district. Most of his players play with an industrial team, and when the latter team is scheduled to play, Hoechstedder is out of luck for getting a team together.

It is hardly possible that W. O. W. will brace enough to get into the second-half fight. Mike Jedinak now is concentrating on the Class A elimination fights. The Wows are the title holders and naturally cannot afford to let up.

With the cream of the district still left in the Class A. W. O. W. is going to find it hard to repeat. When the Wows played the Homestead Aces last Sunday, most all of the leading contenders in the district for the Class A title had men at the game watching the [illegible] Club. Verona was very much interested in the outcome of the game, and the form of the titleholders. However, anything is liable to happen in an elimination series.

Fans in the district are still curious to know why the Pleasant Valley Smilers were dumped out of the first round by the Sheridan Club. Johnny Dunsky says most of the regular players failed to get to the game. And we believe what Johnny says. The Steel City team, with Herron Hill, Dispatch and Moore Cards, of the first half leaders, and the Whoopee Club, Haley Cub, and Harris of the second half leaders, should be a good race.

Cubs Offer to Buy Vance New Undershirt

Dazzy Vance

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Unless Dazzy Vance, Brooklyn's speedball ace, buys a new undershirt, Manager Joe McCarthy, of the Cubs, either will buy one for him or complain about it to President Heydler of the National League.

Every time Dazzy hurls against the Cubs he wears a ragged undershirt, and, when he winds up to pitch, the ravelings flutter in the breeze like an old-fashioned fly chaser. McCarthy and his Cubs charge the ravelings flutter so much that they can't help but watch them instead of the ball. Hence, Dazzy strikes out many of them and consistently defeats them.

Hack Wilson, Cub home-run slugger, is one of the complainants. Hack struck out four times the last time Dazzy pitched to him.

RED SOX CRUSHED

BOSTON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The White Sox earned only two runs yet chalked up a total of 15 to defeat the Red Sox, 15 to 4, in the second game of their series here today. Eleven of the visitors' runs were scored in the first three innings, when five errors were made behind Ruffing.

Chicago got 18 hits, with Metzler, Hunnefield and Reynolds leading the assault. The score:

TIGERS-NATS BILL OFF

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—The Detroit-Washington doubleheader here today was called off on account of rain. A doubleheader will be played tomorrow.

Civics Meet Stowe Nine

The North Side Civics, first half winner of the City loop, will be the attraction at Reliance Field Sunday afternoon, meeting the Stowe Civics in the feature game of the day.

Pop Geer's club received a severe setback during the week in the league race, but intends to come back at the expense of the North Siders. Steve Roscoe probably will hook up with Walt Heidler in one of the real pitching duels of the season. The game will be called at 3 o'clock.

Manager Geer is looking for games abroad with the semi-pro clubs in the tri-state district. Twilight or Saturday dates are needed. For games, write William Geer, 1111 Dohrman street, McKees Rocks, or call Federal 2879-J.

The Duquesne Builders are looking for games with first class clubs. Managers wishing to book this Greater Pittsburgh League attraction should write Tom Martin, R. F. D. No. 1, Homestead, Pa., or call Homestead 2823-M.

The W. O. W. Club, Class A elimination champion, will play the second round battle in defense of its title Sunday afternoon at Harlan Field, when the Stephens-Jenkins nine of Homestead, travels to the Rox. Manager Jedinak feels that the Steelers will extend the Wows. This stacks up as one of the best games of the tournament. The game will be called at 3:30 o'clock.

Plenty of action awaits the Reliance Life City League nine this week. Herb James has the club in wonderful shape. On Wednesday, St. Johns will be met at Reliance Field, Thursday the big battle with the Book Shoe nine at Olympia Park will be flashed and Stowe Civics will be met next Sunday at Reliance Field. With the Insurance boys meeting practically all of the leaders this week, it is very evident that its chance of copping the second half title depends upon the outcome of this week's games.

George Miller wants to book games with the leading clubs of the tri-state district to bolster the league schedule. Managers wishing to book the insurance nine should write George Miller, Reliance Life Insurance Company, or call Atlantic 0626.

Pleasant Valley Smilers, present leaders of the City loop, are scheduled at home for one game this week, meeting the Reineckers at Wilson Field on Friday. Manager Johnny Dunsky wants to book games with the best semi-pro clubs in the tri-state district. Write J. Dunsky, Patrick street, or call Lafayette 3911-R.

The Soho Board of Trade nine will meet the J. J. Boyles at the Soho Board of Trade picnic at Kennywood Park Tuesday afternoon. Manager Johnny Hornya is getting the Traders together again for this important game, which will be the feature event of the picnic.

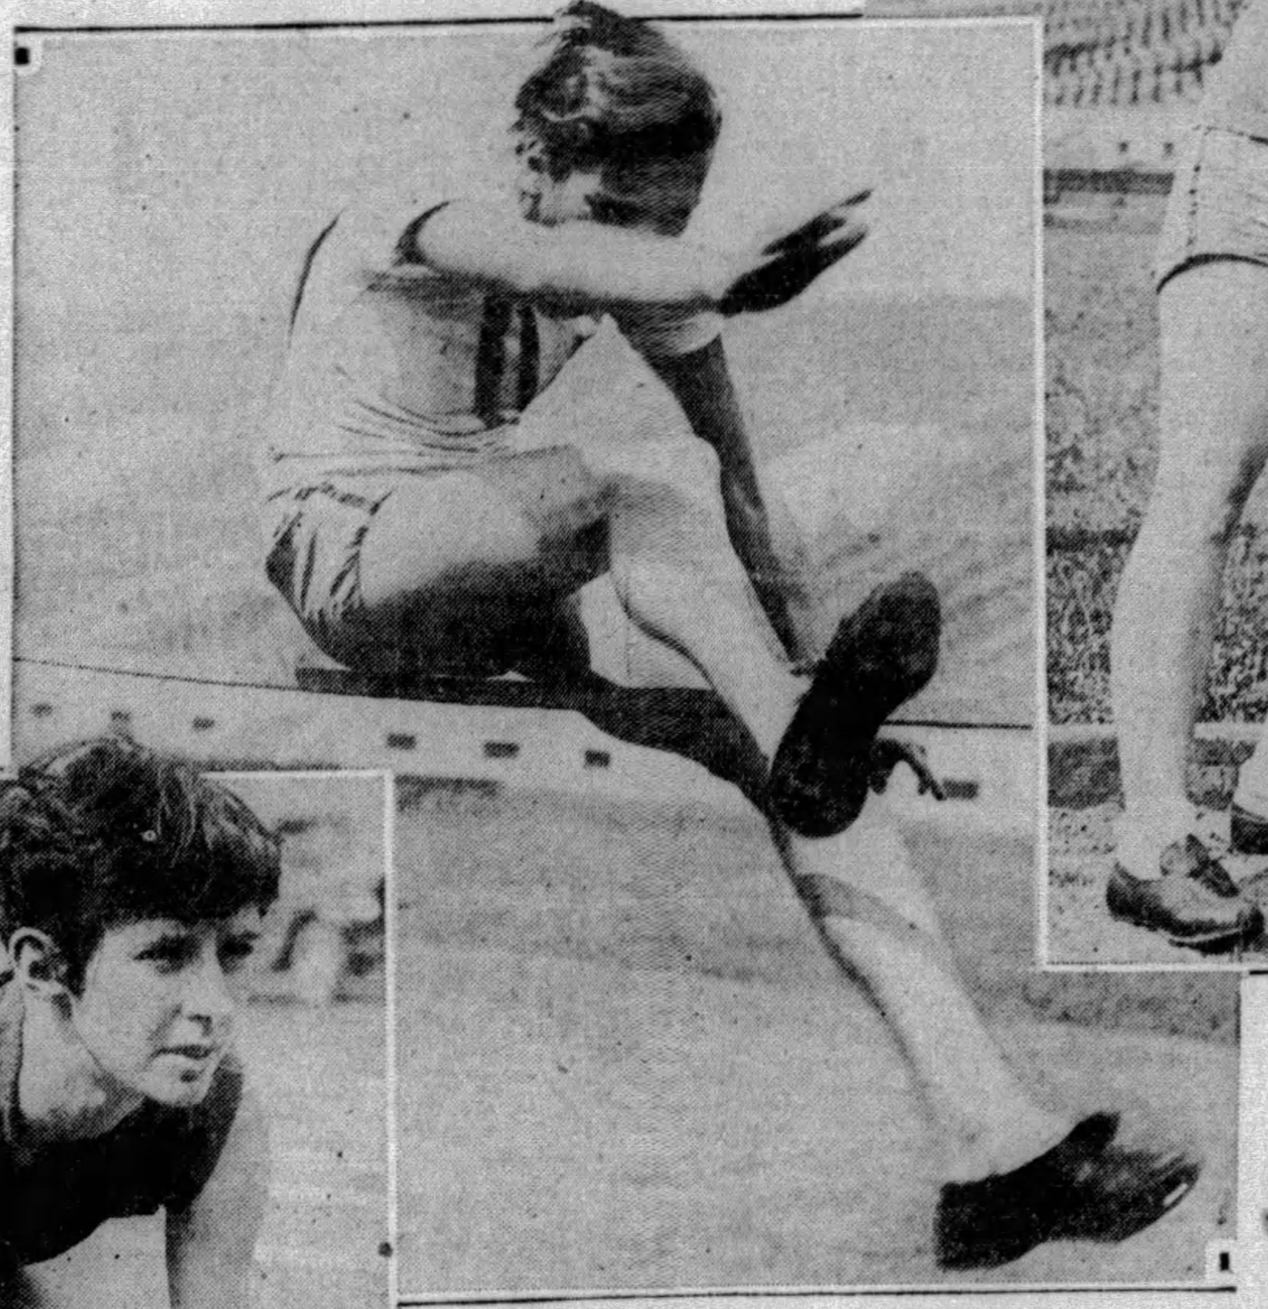
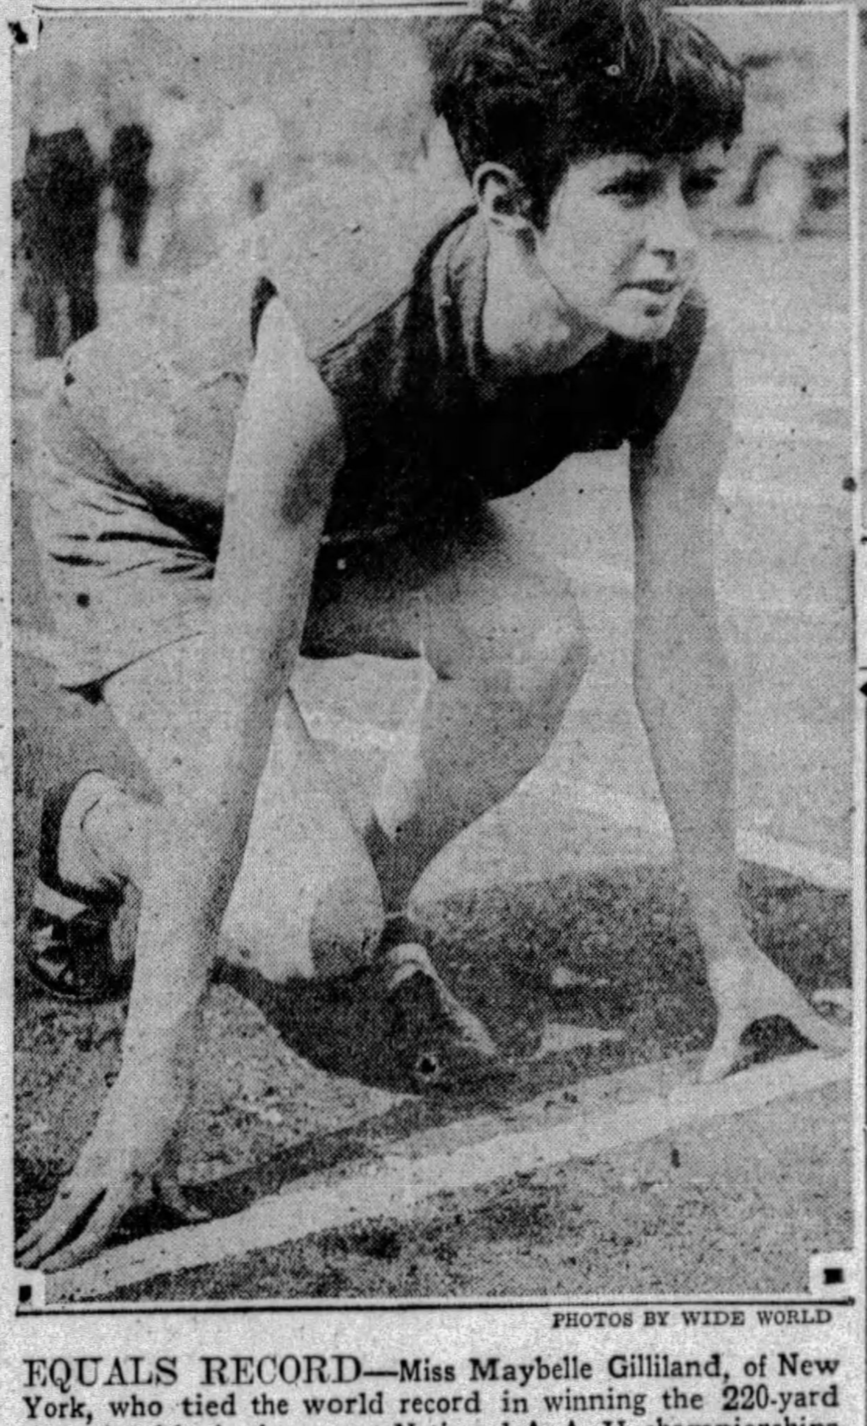
All of the inter-club league matches scheduled in the Pittsburgh Tennis Association Saturday were prevented by rain.

FAIR NATIONAL TRACK AND FIELD CHAMPIONS

DUAL WINNER—Miss Rene McDonald, of Boston, member of the 1928 American Olympic team, who won the eight-pound shot put and discus throw, setting a new mark in the former event.



JUMP STAR—Miss Jean Shiley, of Philadelphia, who won the high jump title with a leap of 4 feet 9⅞ inches, a few inches shy of her best mark.



PHOTOS BY WIDE WORLD

EQUALS RECORD—Miss Maybelle Gilliland, of New York, who tied the world record in winning the 220-yard championship in the recent National A. A. U. championships at Chicago. Her time was 27 4-5 seconds. She also was a member of the winning 440-yard relay team.

Rain Gives Pirates Rest

Lindstrom, who is very ill in Cincinnati. The star third baseman succumbed to an attack of tonsilitis and was left in care of a nurse at the Ohio city. He will not participate in any games of the series which will be resumed Monday afternoon.

Manager John McGraw was among those absent when the Giant entourage pulled into Pittsburgh. The commander-in-chief of the Broadway circus left his team in Cincinnati to seek some star ball players. His mission was rather secret, but John J. met with President Charles Stoneham in Redland and the two left for parts unknown. The Giants, therefore, were in charge of Ray Schalk, assistant manager, as they cavorted in the Oakland orchard.

McGraw, it was stated by other New York officials, will return to Pittsburgh in time to direct the club in Monday's game. Single contests are scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

KREMER VS. HUBBELL

Remy Kremer and Carl Hubbell were all warmed up and ready to do their stuff on the mound when the Saturday sport was postponed. It is likely that the Pirate righthander and the tall southpaw of the slow pitches and screw balls will tangle Monday afternoon.

Although the Giants are something like 11 games behind the Cubs, McGraw apparently figures that his club has a pennant chance. His mood is reflected in the early appearance here of Hubbell and Joe Genewich. The two pitchers came to Pittsburgh ahead of the club to be ready for the slab assignment.

Barnes in Final Of Coast Title Play

OCEAN CITY, N. J., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Bruce Barnes, of Texas University, will try for two Atlantic Coast tennis championships here tomorrow.

In the singles final he meets Bradshaw Harrison, of the University of Oregon, and in the doubles final Barnes and Jake Hess, Jr., of Rice Institute, Texas, will clash with Earl Taylor and Hugh Dunlop, University of Texas. The final round today was postponed because of rain.

Hagen-Smith Golf Victors

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Walter Hagen and Horton Smith combined their efforts for a best-ball of 68 to defeat Brad Oxnard, former state amateur champion, and Eddie Myers, local professional, 4 and 3, in an exhibition match at the Metacomet Golf Club this afternoon.

Hagen's par-equaling 37 carried the invaders over the first nine all even and then Smith took up his share of the burden with a 35 for the homeward stretch. The British open champion was approximately 73, while the young Missourian, as a result of an erratic first nine, was 77.

McCARTHY IN FINAL

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Aug. 3.—(INS.)—Maurice McCarthy, Jr., Metropolitan amateur champion, and John Ayling, of Onondaga, will meet here tomorrow in the 36-hole final of the New York state amateur golf championship.

McCarthy earned a crack at the title by winning his third round match from Sam McKeon, Albany, and whipping Chubby Hicks, of Long Island, in an extra hole semifinal affair.

Grays Beat Agathons, 8-3

The Homestead Grays defeated the Massillon Agathons, 8 to 3, at Midland Saturday afternoon.

Steve McCann, scout for the New York Americans, was in the stands watching Sharkey, the Agathon's pitcher, who hails from Canton, and shut out the Boston Braves last Sunday.

The Grays got to Sharkey early in the game and won handily.

Other sandlot games in the district Saturday were washed out by rain.

TULANE SIGNS BANK.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—T. P. (Ted) Bank, former University of Michigan football and baseball star, has been signed as head coach of baseball and freshman football coach at Tulane University. While at Michigan, Bank led his team to victory in every game he played as quarterback.

BLUE LARKSPUR LOST TO TURF

will loose a golden opportunity to gain a position among the first five leading money winners of all time. At present he is only $5,000 behind Display, which ranks fifth.

Pitted against only four runners of mediocre ability, Blue Larkspur would have gone to the post this afternoon at probably the shortest odds of the season on the Metropolitan tracks.

IN HARD CAMPAIGN

The Bradley colt has gone through a hard campaign this season, winning the Frankfort stakes, the Withers, the Belmont and the American Classic and finishing second in the Dwyer and unplaced in the Kentucky Derby. Rupturing of the sheath of a tendon probably means that the son of Black Servant-Blossom Time will not get in shape even for late fall engagements. His next big race was to be the Travers mid-summer derby at Saratoga, August 17.

LEAGUE GAMES OUT.

CHARLEROI, Pa., Aug. 3.—All of the games scheduled today in the Monongahela Valley Baseball League were postponed on account of rain.

KENNETH MYERS WINS NATIONAL SCULLING TITLE

Philadelphia Oarsman Defeats Joe Wright, Former Diamond Sculls Champion.

MacGreal Defends Sprint Championship in Regatta At Springfield, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Kenneth Myers, of Philadelphia, today became the single sculls champion of America by defeating Poe Wright, Canadian champion and former holder of the Diamond Sculls, by a length in the National Rowing Association's 1¼-mile classic here on the Connecticut River course.

Russell Codman, of the Union Boat Club, Boston, the other starter, crossed the finish line eight lengths behind the Canadian. Myers' time was 8 minutes 18 4-5 seconds, slow because he bucked a head wind.

Emanuel J. MacGreal, of the Bachelors' Barge Club, Philadelphia, defended his national sprinting sculls championship by defeating his clubmate, W. E. Garrett Gillmore, by a half length in the quarter-mile dash event.

Johnny Guest, Canadian single sculling champion, finished third, about a length behind Gillmore, and John A. Croos, of the Union Boat Club, Boston, was the last to cross the finish line.

MacGreal's winning time was 1 minute 22 2-5 seconds, much slower than that of his qualifying heat.

PENN A. C. WINS

The Penn Athletic Club Rowing Association eight, of Philadelphia, won the six-shell senior eight-oared championship by two lengths after fighting off a great finishing drive by the Springfield Rowing Association eight. The Century Boat Club crew, of St. Louis, finished third, a half-length behind the Springfield oarsmen and that same margin separated the fourth finisher, the New York Athletic Club eight. Fifth place went to the New York A. C.'s intermediate crew and the Lincoln Park Boat Club eight, of Chicago, was the last to cross the line. The winning time was 6 minutes 22 3-5 seconds.

In the dual junior eight-oared race between the Springfield Rowing Association and the Farragut Boat Club, of Lynn, the local Sweepswingers easily won over the mile-and-a-quarter course by more than six lengths. The time was 7 minutes 32 3-5 seconds.

BACHELOR'S CLUB VICTOR

The Bachelor's Barge Club, of Philadelphia, defeated the Penn Athletic Club in the senior quadruple sculls event in the fastest time made by any crew in the regatta. The time of the winner was 7 minutes 4-5 second, and that of the Penn A. C., 7 minutes 4 seconds.

The South Side Boat Club four, of Quincy, Ill., led the Pennsylvania Barge Club crew, of Philadelphia, across the finish line by a good four lengths in the senior four-oared shells without coxwain. The South Siders' time for the mile and a quarter was 7 minutes, 43 2-5 seconds. The third starter, the Minnesota Boat Club, of St. Paul, trailed the victor by almost a dozen lengths.

The Undine Barge Club lightweights uncorked a beautiful last-minute spurt to defeat the Detroit Boat Club crew by a good length in the senior 145-pound eight-oared shells event. The victors' time was 7 minutes, 15 3-5 seconds.

Philadelphia's stars won six of today's eight championship events and 12 out of 15 titles decided in the two-day competition.

No Southpaw Like Grove or Walberg in National

JAMES J. LONG Sport Comment

Not Ordinary Lefties.
Hard for Bucs or Cubs.
Misfortune Hits Rovers.
McKechnie Not First.
Usual Fistic Promise.
Mat Racket Continues.

PIRATE FLAG HOPE SURVIVES SLUMP

BECAUSE the Pirates have been remarkably successful against left-hand pitching this season, Capt. Pie Traynor recently expressed the belief that if the Bucs and the Athletics meet in the world series Donie Bush's offense will triumph over Bob Grove and Rube Walberg.

Because the Cubs have only one southside hitter in their lineup, one or two other National League men have since predicted that, if the Bruins and the Mackmen are the principals in the October stakes, Philadelphia's two star fork-handers will be no match for Rogers Hornsby and his slugging mates.

AS RESIDENTS of a sector that is exclusively of a National League character in location and connections, fans of the Pittsburgh district naturally will pull hard to see this hope fulfilled, whether the Corsairs or the Cubs face the Mackian troupe for the big title.

But at the same time they have too much baseball sense to kid themselves into believing that such a world series outcome is to be looked upon as a foregone conclusion. They realize that repeated successes against National League left-handers do not, by any means, guarantee similar successes against Mack's great pair of southpaws.

FOR beating the portsiders in the senior wheel is one thing, and turning the same trick against pitchers of the caliber of Grove and Walberg is quite a different proposition. There isn't a left-hander in the National to compare with either of the Quaker City aces.

As a matter of fact, with Herb Pennock preceding Grove and Walberg, the American League has had the class of the left-handers for several years, as it had in the days of Rube Waddell and Eddie Plank. The National no longer has any outstanding southpaw like Art Nehf or Eppa Rixey when they were at their best, Wilbur Cooper, Nap Rucker or Jim Vaughn. It will be a great deal harder to beat Grove and Walberg than it is to down any of the present crop of portsiders in the older league.

WORLD SERIES speculation at this date may seem decidedly premature, but there isn't much room for doubt as to the identity of the club that will make up one end of the big post-season show. The overtaking of the Athletics by the Yankees is still possible, of course, but it is far from being probable. Even if the Mackmen should only break even over the remainder of the course, the Yanks would have to win two out of every three games on an average to beat them to the wire.

IT'S different in the National League. The Cubs have the upper hand at present, but their lead isn't due wholly to their own steady playing, good though it has been. They were helped a lot by the wave of ill luck that engulfed the Pirates, coupled with the collapse of all the local pitchers except Ervin Brame.

Rarely has a pennant contender been hit so hard within a brief period as the Buccaneers were jolted when injuries cost them the services of Burleigh Grimes, Pie Traynor, George Grantham and Paul Waner at one time. That spells almost the whole ball club.

HOWEVER, the Corsairs are not to be counted out of the running, by any means. True, their recent slump while the Bruins were on a long winning streak caused a loss of ground that cannot be regained easily, but the contract is far from being an impossible one.

Nine weeks of the season remain, and much may happen in that time. It took only one week to change the Pittsburgh club from a pennant leader into a poor second.

BASEBALL luck is supposed to even itself up in the course of a campaign, and if that rule holds good this year the Bucs ought to have smooth sailing the remainder of the way while the Cubs are apt to find the breaks reversing themselves and going against them. Besides, the Bruins have not been good finishers in recent years and may wilt again. Then, too, they still have six games to play with the Rovers, five of them at Forbes Field. Stick to the ship.

WHEN the announcement was made that Bill McKechnie had been reappointed manager of the Cardinals, the statement was published in some quarters that this was the first time a major league skipper once deposed had ever been re-engaged by the same club.

Nothing of the sort. Right here in Pittsburgh, Pat Donovan was dropped as manager of the Pirates after the 1897 season, only to be placed at the head of the team again when W. H. Watkins passed out in the latter part of the 1899 race. Johnny Evers was given the gate as Cub manager after 1913, but was hired back on the same job in 1921.

SPEAKING of McKechnie, the Cardinals have already shown a marked improvement since Billy Southworth hit the trail back to Rochester and the Wilkinsburg citizen took charge in St. Louis. It goes to show the vast difference between the qualifications of the two men in the important matter of handling pitchers.

That was all the Cards needed—a man who knew his business and who could handle the hurlers intelligently. The team itself is as well balanced as any in the National League. It is safe to predict that McKechnie will be bossing the Redbirds again in 1930.

JACKIE FIELDS, the new welterweight Queensberry king, says he is going to be a "fighting champion." That's what every new ring champion says, after first rushing to the telephone to call up his mother, according to the modern publicity men. If Fields keeps his word he'll be lonesome among the champions, but the chances are that he'll proceed to pick the soft ones and sidestep the tough boys, as all the other title holders except Tommy Loughran have done in recent years. Fighting long since ceased to be a sport. It's a business now, with "safety first" as the main policy.

FROM an inside wrestling source comes the information that Strangler Lewis was to have "won back" the "loaned" championship from Gus Sonnenberg when they met in Boston recently for the third time, but that the parties were afraid to go through with the "agreement" because a Hub newspaper had printed a series of articles exposing mat fakes.

So now it is proposed to arrange another match for Chicago or Los Angeles, and this time, it is said, Lewis is to become champion again. Of course, it will mean another financial clean-up. When Barnum made his famous estimate, they had not yet put second hands on the clocks.

CARUSO TAKES HOTEL STAKES AT SARATOGA

Mack Garner Rides Colt to Brilliant Victory; Gallant Fox Second, Hi-Jack Third.

Winner Pays Backers 7-to-2; Triumphs in Brilliant Spurt On the Home Stretch.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—In a light rain and on a fast track, W. R. Coe's Caruso, admirably ridden by Mack Garner, accounted for the U. S. Hotel stakes at six furlongs here today. The colt picked up 122 pounds, stood a long drive gamely and ran the distance in 1:12. Belair Stud's Gallant Fox was second and Hi-Jack was third. Caruso paid 7 to 2. May A, which was coupled with Caruso, ran through the outside fence just before the start. He was caught and returned to the barrier.

The field was sent away to a perfect start. Caruso got away fast, but was quickly passed by Hi-Jack. The latter led to the middle of the turn, where he was joined by Gallant Fox. However, just as the field made the turn into the stretch Caruso came fast and, closing with a whirlwind rush on the outside, passed the leaders at the sixteenth pole and won by a length and a half. Gallant Fox beat Hi-Jack three lengths for the place. The winner received $14,000.

The Garner family just about monopolized the day's riding honors, Mack being astride two winners and Willie up on a like number. Willie sent Marine home first in the Miller Stakes, with Frisius second. Both were added to the list of starters after Blue Larkspur was scratched.

STABLEMATES WIN

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—(AP).—The stable of W. C. and E. W. Reichert's My Dandy, and Brown Wisdom ran one-two in the Windy City Handicap, feature attraction on the opening day of this track. Mei Foo finished third.

My Dandy, showing fine speed from the start, raced into the lead on entering the stretch and under a well judged and hustling ride by F. Halbert, beat his stable mate by a neck. Brown Wisdom was outrun in the first quarter, but moved up on entering the stretch and finished strong, taking second money by two lengths over Mei Foo.

The Reichert entry paid $7.00 to win on a $2 ticket and the entry earned $5,200 and $1,000.

Mid-Atlantic Washed Out

Rain washed out the complete Mid-Atlantic League program Saturday, nary a ball being tossed by any of the clubs in the circuit.

Scottdale and Clarksburg were held idle, the Scotties thus being assured of holding their league lead over the week-end. Cumberland at Charleroi, Wheeling at Jeannette and Johnstown at Fairmont were the other games called off.

JACK DEMPSEY On Boxing

The Dempsey Shift.
How It Worked.
Speed Necessary.
Three Variations.
When to Use It.
And When Not To.

MY SECRETS OF SOCK—CHAPTER VIII.

NOTHING that I used in ring warfare caused as much discussion as the shift of my early years.

Success of the shift depends upon speed. Unless a man is remarkably fast—with eye, mind and muscle in perfect coordination— the shift, as I used it, is more dangerous to him than it is to his opponent.

When I was a spry young fellow, I used that shift without ever getting into trouble. But, in 1926, when I tangled up with Gene Tunney in Philadelphia, I used it once—rather I tried to use it—and then I discarded it completely as an attacking method in that battle. For I was slow that night—slow in arms and slow in legs. Tunney caught me in a shift and whacked me with a snappy right hand. It convinced me that I was foolish to try it against him.

I never tried it in any of my late fights—with Sharkey in 1927 and against Tunney again in 1927. That was because I discarded toe fighting for those battles. I took a flat-footed stance and a flat-footed fighter cannot execute the shift.

The shift calls for the firing of one, two or three fake punches before the actual wallop is released. Therefore, it becomes obvious that the man trying it must be like chain lightning in his movements, for he is leaving himself rather wide open during the shifting. If he shifts slowly—as I did in Philadelphia—the other fellow, if he is smart, can drill through with a punch.

THE shift is started from a face-on position, such as is shown in Picture 8-1. A man cannot execute a successful shift from a sideways stance, i.e., the left foot far forward, right foot far back, which is the regular boxing position.

In Picture 8-2, you will note that I am shooting a left for the head. Of course, in that picture, posed with Lou Magnolia, the referee, I am far away from him. In an actual fight I never would throw a punch of any kind—fake or real—from such a distance because I could not reach my man with it. But for demonstration purposes, so that the action can be shown clearly in the picture, I stood far away from Magnolia.

That left lead looks like a business punch to my rival—but it is only a fake. For no sooner has it zipped on its way than I shift my right foot forward and let go with the right hand, as is shown in Picture 8-2.

I used a single, double and triple shift. They worked like this:

THE single shift isn't hard. Many ringmen use it, at least they use something like it. The double shift is tougher and the triple shift is hardest of all to learn. The latter also is the most daring as well as the most dangerous for the user. For it means THREE FAKE LEADS before the actual punch is unleashed.

In the matter of attack, the triple and double shift are better than the single shift because they are more baffling to your opponent. For, when he sees fists swirling at him from all directions, he is likely to become confused, forget his defense during the bewilderment and thus leave himself wide open for the eventual blow.

If your opponent is a slow man—and especially if he is a slow thinker—you should not have much trouble polishing him off with punches thrown from the shift. For he won't be able to move out of range, and, not having a hair-trigger brain, you will have cracked him before he knows what it is all about.

Should he be fast of foot, but slow of thought, or vice versa, you still can use the shift, because, if you have any speed at all, you should be able to bluff and shift, and bluff and shift again, and then hit before he knows what it is all about.

But, if your opponent is a quick thinker, and fast in the use of his legs and arms, a triple or even the double shift is risky. He may beat you to the punch while you are faking. So, against a man like that, don't try to go any farther than the simple single shift. And don't try that too often, because he will figure it out and beat you to the punch.

IN all instances where you are planning to "pull" a shift, study the speed—mental and physical—of your opponent before you decide how many shifts you can use on him. And remember that at ALL TIMES your success with it depends entirely upon your own speed. If you are slow afoot and slow in getting away with your punches the shift is inadvisable for you.

Only a man with great natural speed can use a shift successfully. If you don't believe it, give a thought to my career. When I had my athletic youth and my speed, I used the shift with unfailing luck against 30 or 35 men. But, in 1926, when I wasn't right and my legs and arms lacked their normal speed, I wasn't able to use that shift even once in a successful way.

District Gridders Open Training Camps Soon

Prominent Elevens To Perform Here

Haskell, Ohio State University and Chicago Loyola to Make Debuts.

By JESS CARVER.

THOSE of you who signed a note last spring had best hike down to the bank and make arrangements for a renewal. In less than a month, one day less, to be exact, the ambitious collegiates of this and other districts throughout the land of the spree and the home of the rave will be safely ensconced within the rigid confines of football camps.

Jock Sutherland

Only three of the 17 varieties that annually represent this section of the collegiate battlefront go out of their campus limits to train and it has always been a mystery why one of these three has to go any further into the wilds to seek concealment for its gridiron preparations. Pitt goes to Camp Hamilton, Windber, Pa.; West Virginia to Jackson Mills, W. Va., and Thiel pitches its camp at Conneaut Lake, for no reason at all.

The remainder of the list, including Carnegie Tech, Duquesne, the two Pittsburgh institutions, Wash-Jeff, Bethany, Waynesburg, W. Va. Wesleyan, Davis-Elkins, Geneva, Penn State, St. Vincent's, Grove City, Allegheny and Westminster, stick close to home.

Aside from the good word that work will begin September 3 for the Panthers, Tartan and Dukes, nothing of much importance has been heard recently from our three local schools. Carnegie Tech is making some alterations in its gym and track house, where the Skibo squad will be housed during the days of pre-campaign drill and Graduate Manager of Athletics Holohan, of Duquesne, will be starting to lay out the cots and prepare the menus for his Dukes within the next two weeks.

Pitt's advance guard of downtrodden freshmen and assistant varsity managers likely will precede the big squad to Windber by a week to get the camp in readiness, including the work to be done on Jock Sutherland's own golf course, which wins without a murmur of dissent the title of the world's worst course.

EXPECT GREAT SEASON

To hear any but the coaches tell it, this coming campaign is going to be a great one, a hum-dinger, if you know what that means. Carnegie Tech, 1929 district champion, will be hard-pressed to retain its laurels this fall, for almost without exception, tri-state elevens shape up (on paper) as being stronger than in '28.

But to listen to the coaches, you'd figure the total number of victories to be scored by elevens hereabouts to be exactly zero, less if possible. No one ever accused any of these football mentors of wearing rose colored glasses.

Some outstanding figures will be missing from the gridiron picture this fall, necessitating some heroic work on the part of the up-and-coming youngsters if these places are to be filled. Howard Harpster, Cy Letzelter, Tony Sweet, Mike Getto, Alex Fox, Honey Guarino, Stan Berkman, Carl Aschman, Ken Gilchrist, Clarence Keefer, Dale McKinney, Dale Fiers, Virgil Patterline and George Deip, all so well known that added identification is unnecessary, have passed along.

STAR TEAMS BOOKED

Fans are looking forward to the appearance here of some fine elevens, viz.: Ohio State, Notre Dame, Haskell Indians and Loyola University, of Chicago. The appearance of the Indians, Ohio State and Loyola will be the first in history on local gridirons. Notre Dame has been here before.

After skipping one season, a local eleven will travel westward again, Carnegie Tech following the trail reopened in 1927 by Pitt to the Pacific coast and California. The Panthers return to Nebraska and invade North Carolina, while Tech plays in St. Louis, New York, Cleveland and Los Angeles. The Dukes meet big time opponents in West Virginia at Morgantown and go East for a game in Washington, D. C., with Catholic University.

Paul Waner — Lefty O'Doul — George A. Putnam — Lloyd Waner

BIG BUSINESS—George A. Putnam is secretary of the San Francisco Baseball Club, of the Pacific Coast League, which makes a specialty of selling baseball talent to the major leagues at fancy prices. Paul Waner, of the Pirates, netted the Seals $60,000, Lefty O'Doul, now with the Phillies, cost the New York Giants $50,000, and Jimmy O'Connell and Willie Kamm are among the others who went up as high-priced beauties. But the club is not infallible in its judgment. It discarded Lloyd Waner and the Pirates picked him up for nothing—and today he's one of the most valuable players in the business. Above photo was taken at Forbes Field, where Putnam was a visitor during the recent Pirates-Phillies series.

Clan Douglass Team Defeated in Relay

Clan Scott Breaks Up Monopoly in Event at Annual Scottish Picnic.

CLAN DOUGLASS' usual supremacy in the one-mile relay race at the annual outing of the Scottish Clans at Kennywood Park Saturday received a severe jolt when the team from Clan Scott, of Turtle Creek, defeated the crack Wilkinsburg quartet by two yards. Douglass had won the event two years in succession and if it had won Saturday's race would have had permanent possession of the trophy. Kennel, running as anchor man for Scott, ran a beautiful race and passed the Douglass man in the stretch.

Fred Vargo copped both the half-mile and the mile, while Jones, running unattached, won the 100-yard open race from a classy field. Practically all of the races were run in a heavy downpour of rain.

HYNDS BOOTERS WIN

The five-a-side soccer contest was the most successful of the series in recent years. Sixteen teams entered the meet, including Heidelberg. The representatives of the amateur champions went through to the final round, in which the Hynds Club defeated them, 2 goals to 1. Pie Caraffi, of the Gold Bonds, of Cleveland, members of the Western Professional League, was the star player in the Hynds lineup.

The results:

FIRST ROUND.

Hynds Club, 1 goal, 1 corner; Herminie, 2 corners.

National Tube, 3 goals; Jones Club, 0.

Donora, 2 goals, 2 corners; Westinghouse, 2 goals.

Leechburg, 3 goals; Clan Robertson, 1 goal.

Heidelberg, 4 goals; New Brighton 0.

Indianola, 1 goal, 1 corner; Jeannette 0.

SECOND ROUND.

National Tube, 2 goals; Clan Robertson, 1 goal.

SEMI-FINALS.

Heidelberg, 3; Donora, 2.

Hynds Club, 3; Leechburg, 0.

FINAL ROUND.

Hynds Club (Benick, Robb, Caraffi, Glyde, Taterzi), 2 goals; Heidelberg (Jones, Stenzel, Vallani, Fred Donnelli, O'Donnell), 1 goal, 1 corner.

Gardner, of Westinghouse, won the place-kick contest.

Old Macks, Cubs Hope to Stage Series Reunion

Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

THERE probably will be quite a reunion of the old Chicago Cubs and Athletics, rivals in the world series of 1910, if the modern editions of these teams, now doing the pacesetting, meet again in the world series.

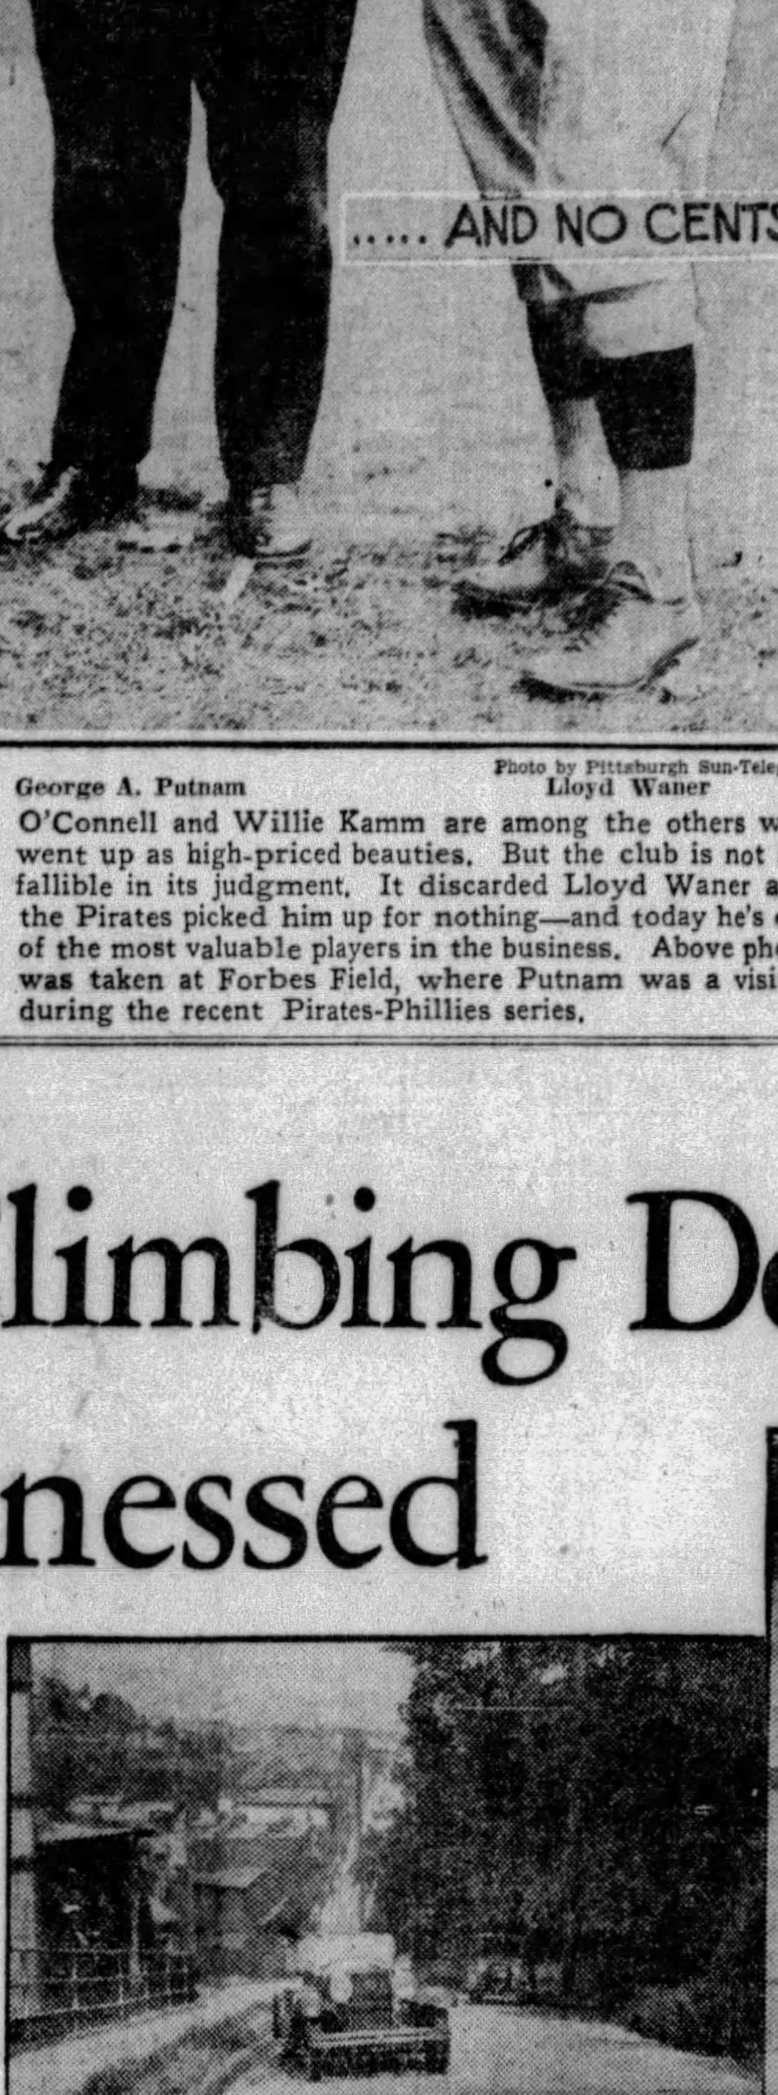
The rival second basemen of two decades ago are still in harness, Johnny Evers with the Boston Braves, and Eddie Collins as a first lieutenant of Connie Mack, although Evers was kept out of the 1910 series by injury. Eddie's place is now on the third base coaching line.

Frank Chance, the one-time peerless leader, is dead and so is Harry Steinfeldt, Cub third baseman, and Eddie Plank, Mack's great southpaw, who saw no action, however, in the 1910 series. But Joe Tinker, Cub shortstop, probably would forsake his Florida real estate for the big series and the entire Athletic infield of the old days—McInnis, Collins, Barry and Baker—might be re-assembled, at least for photographic purposes.

The Greatest Hill Climbing Demonstration Pittsburgh has ever witnessed

Ralph Hepburn climbs Pittsburgh's hardest hills in Studebaker car that has been driven 63,000 miles

This car has been lubricated consistently with PENNZOIL



Above, on the Brady Street hill. The car topped this 20 to 25% grade at 30 miles per hour. At left, the Waldbridge Street hill. Here the gradometer showed a 24 to 26% grade. The car cleared the top at just under 30 miles per hour.

The Center Avenue hill in Aspinwall—the Federal and Rialto Street hills on the North Side—the Waldbridge Street and Shaler Street hills on the South Side—and all the other tough hills in Pittsburgh—

Ralph Hepburn, veteran automobile driver, took them all easily in his Pennzoil-lubricated Studebaker. Most of them in high—finishing at 20 to 30 miles an hour! Many from a standing start! Others in second with from 7 to 12 passengers aboard!

Hepburn's car is strictly a stock car. It is the same Studebaker President which made the wonderful world record of 30,000 miles in 26,3‑6 minutes at Atlantic City Speedway a year ago. Now it has travelled over 63,000 miles. Yet the motor is still smooth, still amazingly quiet. You can't hear it idle!

What's behind this great record of performance?

A fine car—and "the best motor oil in the world." The Studebaker car that Hepburn drove has been consistently lubricated with Pennzoil. It was Pennzoil lubricated in the great 30,000 mile test last year. It has been lubricated with this same, high quality, pure Pennsylvania oil, consistently, ever since.

What Pennzoil has done in the case of this Studebaker is not an unusual feat for this oil. Pennzoil is made from Pennsylvania crude of highest quality, and nothing else. It is refined by the most modern methods. Over a million users will tell you—"Pennzoil is the best motor oil in the world." And they will add, "It's the most economical, too, because it lasts twice as long as ordinary oil."

Look for the Pennzoil sign. Pittsburgh dealers who display it are men who believe in quality merchandise. They are good men to deal with.

Below—"Pig Alley." To test pulling power, Hepburn took this hill in Rialto Street in second, with 12 passengers. A total human load of 2,075 pounds!

Above—Columbo Street, an 18% grade, was topped at better than 35 miles per hour, despite use of brakes at one point where street repairs were going on.

PIRATE BATTER SETS PACE IN THREE-BAGGERS

Babe Herman Tops Loop In Slugging, While Foxx Shows Way in American.

Guy Bush, of Cubs, and Lefty Grove, of Macks, Best Hurlers in Majors.

LLOYD WANER is the only Pirate batsman holding one of the leading positions in the National League batting race, according to figures released Saturday and including games of last Thursday.

The Pirate fly-chaser has hit 15 triples and is showing the way to all rivals in this department.

Babe Herman, of the Robins, has moved into first place in the National League batting race with a mark of .407, while Jimmy Foxx continues to set the pace in the American League with .390.

In the National, Hornsby, Chicago, and Ott, New York, are tied for the most runs scored with 96 apiece, while Ott leads the league in runs batted in with 105.

Terry, New York, rapped out the most hits, 156.

Frederick, Brooklyn, leads in doubles with 34.

Klein, Philadelphia, banged out the most home runs, 33.

Cuyler, Chicago, pilfered the most bases, 26.

Bush, Chicago, heads the pitchers with 14 victories and 1 defeat for a mark of .933.

In the American, Gehringer, Detroit, leads in runs scored with 89 and in stolen bases with 17.

Manush, St. Louis, rapped out the most hits, 150.

Heilman and Johnson, of Detroit, are tied for the most doubles with 35 apiece.

Miller, Philadelphia, has the most triples, 12.

Gehrig, New York, banged out the most home runs, 26.

Simmons, Philadelphia, batted in the most runs, 102.

Grove, Philadelphia, tops the pitchers with 17 victories and 2 defeats for a mark of .895.

BABE TAKES LEAD

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—A terrific clouting which brought him 16 hits last week has lifted Babe Herman, of Brooklyn, into a long lead among the National League sluggers, the Brooklyn Babe sent his batting average up from .396 to .407 to take the lead from Frank O'Doul, of the Phillies. In the averages released today, including Wednesday's games, Herman has a margin of 22 percentage points.

O'Doul, second among the league's regulars, hitting at a .385 clip, has a good margin over the third man, Bill Terry, of the Giants, whose mark is .377. Terry has one point of leadership to his credit, however, having wrapped out 156 hits to take first place in that respect. O'Doul ran him a good second with 151 hits.

HORNSBY TIES OTT

Rogers Hornsby, the Cubs ace, came up to even terms with Mel Ott of the Giants in the matter of scoring in the week. Each has tallied 96 times. Ott has a double crown, having batted in 105 runs. O'Doul holds second place in scoring as well as hitting, having crossed the plate 94 times. Hack Wilson of Chicago holds the runner-up post in the matter of delivering runs to the other fellow. He has batted in 104 counters. Frederick of Brooklyn, with 34, leads in hitting doubles while Lloyd Waner of Pittsburgh holds the triple crown with 15 three baggers. Chuck Klein, the youthful Phillie, increased his home run total to 33 to lead Wilson by three. Ott is third with 29 four baggers.

After the three leaders among the regulars come: Klein, Philadelphia, .366; Hornsby, Chicago, .364; Hafey, St. Louis, .360; Traynor, Pittsburgh, .360; L. Waner, Pittsburgh, .356; Wilson, Chicago, .351 and Douthit, St. Louis, .349.

The team batting title remains in the hands of the Phillies for another week. They have a collective average of .307 while the Cubs and the Pirates are tied for the second place at .305. New York is third with .300. Chicago's Cubs have the best fielding argument by a one point margin over New York, .975 to .974. Cincinnati is third with .973.

Guy Bush of Chicago added one more victory to his list during the week to hold his lead among the league's hurlers. He has 14 victories to his credit and but one defeat for an average of .933. Burleigh Grimes of Pittsburgh is second with an .889 mark, gained from 16 wins and two losses. Johnson of St. Louis, Mays of New York and Carlson of Chicago each have marks of .750 but have not participated in the game as frequently as their rivals. Root of Chicago has won 11 games and lost four for a .733 mark.

FOXX MAKES GAIN

The domination of Jimmy Foxx of the Athletics, over the American League batting situation, became more pronounced during the 15th week of the season. Connie Mack's first baseman had a mark of .390, 17 points better than that of Heinie Manush, of St. Louis, who was in second place.

In shaking off the Manush menace, Foxx clouted the ball at a .428 clip during the week, a pace which proved much too brisk for his nearest rival. The week also gave George Herman Ruth opportunity to break into the first 10 society for the first time this season. Foxx was followed by these regulars: Manush, St. Louis, .373; Simmons, Philadelphia, .362; Lazzeri, New York, .361; Fonseca, Cleveland, .359; Heilmann, Detroit, .354; Combs, New York, .350; Ruth, New York, .348; Cochrane, Philadelphia, .346; Fothergill, Detroit, .345.

An increase in the activity of the Yankee bats boosted Miller Huggins' team into a tie with the Athletics for first position in team batting. The Yanks picked up four points to make their season average .307, while Philadelphia reached the same figure by adding two points. Detroit, tied with the A's last week, found the pitching more difficult in the East and slipped to third with a mark of .301. Philadelphia had collected a season total of 635 runs, and had restricted opposition to 377.

Connie Mack's pitchers continued to dominate the hurlers working in turn, with Robert Moses Grove laying the route. Grove won one game for a record of 17 victories against only two defeats, while Rube Walberg accomplished two triumphs to make his record 16 wins and five defeats. George Earnshaw's collection was the same as Walberg's. Tom Zachary, of New York, won another game and brought his record to six straight victories.

Four-Day Ban Plastered on Peckinpaugh

International News Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

ROGER PECKINPAUGH'S determination to exercise his inalienable right of expressing an opinion cost him four days' suspension following his run-in with Umpire Moriarity yesterday.

This morning Peck received one of those sweet little epistles from President Barnard, advising him to sit it out and cool off for the next four days. It is the second time in the last month that Peck has received the Barnardian frown.

MISS JACOBS KEEPS TITLE

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Playing on a rain-drenched court, Miss Helen Jacobs, of Berkeley, Cal., won the women's singles final in the annual Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club tournament here today, completely outclassing her fellow-Californian, Miss Edith Cross, of San Francisco, 6-1, 6-2. The match lasted only 33 minutes.

A gallery of slightly more than 200, including Gov. Morgan F. Larson, of New Jersey, looked on as Miss Jacobs, the country's second ranking player, successfully defended her Seabright laurels won last year.

From the outset, it was seen that Miss Cross, No. 3 in the national ranking, had little chance against the well-placed driving and fine volleying of Miss Jacobs. Miss Cross was able to win only three scattered games, the same number collected by Miss Marjorie Morrill, of Dedham, Mass., in the semi-final and by Miss Marjorie Gladman, of Santa Monica, Cal., in the third round. Miss Jacobs suffered the loss of only 11 games and not a single set in her four matches.

Miss Jacobs now needs only one more victory to gain permanent possession of the massive bowl which bears the names of Miss Mary K. Browne, Miss Elizabeth Ryan and Mrs. Molla Mallory besides her own.

The point scores of today's match:

FIRST SET.

									Pts.	G.
Miss Jacobs	4	5	4	4	0	4	5	—	26	6
Miss Cross	2	3	1	2	4	2	3	—	17	1

SECOND SET.

									Pts.	G.
Miss Jacobs	4	5	4	7	4	5	4	4	37	6
Miss Cross	0	3	6	5	2	7	0	2	25	2

The rain, increasing to near cloudburst proportions, completely drowned out the men's doubles final, which eventually was postponed until tomorrow with the youthful team of Berkeley Bell, of Austin, Tex., and Gregory Mangin, of Newark, N. J., leading the old Davis Cup combination of Richard H. Williams II, of Philadelphia, and Watson Washburn, of New York, 7-5, 7-5, 4-6, 2-1.

In the mixed doubles final, contested later in the day when the weather had improved, Bell and Miss Morrill defeated Miss Clara Zinke, of Cincinnati, and J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J., 6-4, 7-5.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT!"

By Ripley

Now Appearing Daily in the Sun-Telegraph

"Believe It or Not" is a series of wonder truths, illustrated by Ropert L. Ripley, the amazing world traveler, who has traversed sixty-four countries in search of his almost unbelievable material which he incorporates into his daily cartoons.

He tells his incredible tales of trees that eat men, snakes that fly, the river that runs backward; he pictures the Ever-Standing Men, the Upside Down Men of Benares; he introduces you to the woman who has sixty-three husbands, one who had sixty-nine children, and a wholesale father who was the proud possessor of 548 sons and 340 daughters. And he can prove every statement he makes.

Sport enthusiasts will prick up their ears at the queer things told by the man who, it is said, can answer more questions on sports than any other living man. Rip's cartoons are exceptionally well drawn, for, in addition to being an investigator and traveler, he is a real artist. "Believe It or Not" is published in a hundred newspapers throughout the world and eagerly read by over six million fans.

Muldoon Names Loughran as Schmeling Foe

HEENEY, SCOTT RULED OUT BY COMMISSIONER

Veteran Member of N. Y. Ring Board Tired of Favor Shown to Foreigners.

Bill Carey's Conciliatory Offer of New Zealander Fails To Click With Solon.

By DAVIS J. WALSH.
International News Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—William H. Carey, the man who read too many detective stories at an early age, arrived in town from Detroit today to lead what he thought was his ace in the hole in the Sharkey-Schmeling business, a suggested compromise with the local boxing commission whereby Tom Heeney was to be substituted against Schmeling for a preliminary fight that would square everybody.

The ace was promptly trumped by Commissioner William Muldoon with the statement that Heeney won't do and never would, and that he, personally, was determined to name the German's opponent for the fight that would qualify Schmeling here for the Sharkey meeting. Muldoon thereupon named his choice. It was Tommy Loughran.

AFFAIR IN TANGLE

As a result, the Sharkey-Schmeling fight is farther away from a home than ever before. Detroit has been named and the date fixed at September 19. But Carey made no secret of the fact today that he would run out on the Detroit arrangement if he could set himself in here. However, he had no idea at the itme that the price involved would be considerably higher than an old wagon tongue like Heeney could furnish. It generally is understood that Schmeling will have no fraction of Loughran.

It will be Loughran or nobody, said Muldoon. This made it look a little like nobody. Carey, in his cautious statements today, clearly indicated that he was beginning to weaken in his defiance of the commission. It would be violent defiance of the commission if he went through with Detroit, after the commission suspended Schmeling for his failure to recognize the Fugazy contract for a Phil Scott fight and later warned the Garden corporation that it was not to do business with Schmeling.

CAREY CONCILIATORY

Carey, therefore, was conciliatory when he returned today with his news about the Heeney compromise. He had obtained Schmeling's consent to Heeney as an opponent and expected the commission to play along at its meeting on Tuesday, thus giving Detroit the old detour. It merely happened that Schmeling's consent was not Muldoon's, and while the latter is not the commission, he took a stand this afternoon against "undeserving foreigners" in comparison with a "deserving American" that will line up popular sentiment behind his views. This sentiment is likely to leave the rest of the commission no alternative but to string along.

TIRED OF FOREIGNERS

"I'm tired of all the consideration we have been giving foreign contenders for the heavyweight title when, all along, we have an American candidate who probably can lick all of them," Muldoon said with some degree of choler. "Schmeling doesn't want Scott, eh, and he's willing to meet Heeney, is he? Well, Heeney won't do, so far as I am concerned. There is only one man who will do. He is Tommy Loughran, a great fighter and boxer, a credit to the profession and to his American upbringing, a man who never has dodged an opponent and one who has been consistently ignored by heavyweights who fear him, which means practically all heavyweights.

"Heeney would be no match for Schmeling, and the latter knows it. He knows that Heeney is much the same type and class of Paulino and I was so ashamed of the one-sided, sloppy exhibition at the Schmeling-Paulino fight that I felt like crawling out on my hands and knees that night. Both of them were foreigners. Why should we be made to stand for their antics when we have a clean, conscientious American like Loughran available, and, in my opinion, ready to fight rings around anybody in the class?

CAN'T SEE SCOTT

"Not satisfied with one all-foreign fight, the talk now is of Phil Scott, an Englishman, as Schmeling's opponent. But Schmeling doesn't favor Scott. That's a queer attitude for a man to take who is trying to qualify himself as the heavyweight champion, but I'm with him to this extent: I don't favor Scott, either. If Schmeling is to discharge his contract obligations in this state, he only can do so for me by meeting Loughran. And that's my last word on the matter."

Coast Star Enters Race

ALTOONA, Pa., Aug 3.—Following closely in the footsteps of the late Frank Lockhart looms as a gigantic task for even the hardest veterans of the automobile speed lanes.

Yet that is the achievement predicted by his thousands of Pacific coast followers for Freddie Frame, a native son of California, who will be among the 14 world famous drivers lining up for the start of the 200-mile national championship automobile sweepstakes at Altoona on Labor Day.

Like Lockhart, Frame emerges from the coast virtually unknown to habitual eastern race followers. And as the late Lockhart reached the racing pinnacle by constant use of a "heavy foot," so Frame bases his bid for immediate and lasting fame.

Reds, Fairmont To Play Exhibition

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Aug. 3.—A large assemblage of diamond fans from many parts of the tri-state area are expected to attend an exhibition game at the local baseball park next Wednesday when the Cincinnati Nationals meet the Fairmont club of the Middle Atlantic Baseball League. President John Heydler, of the National League, has been asked to attend.

After Five Years—Davies Gets Genaro

Long-Sought Bout Finally Falls Into Willie's Lap—Meets Champion at Bowl.

By HARRY KECK, Sports Editor.

WITH boxing shows scheduled at the Meyers Bowl, North Braddock, Monday night; the amateur arena of the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., on the North Side, the armory at Little Washington and Armco Field, Butler, Tuesday night; Conneaut Lake Park, Wednesday night, and the Junction Park arena, New Brighton, Thursday, Western Pennsylvania has a busy week ahead of it, fistically speaking, and this with the New Castle Jolly Bowl and Jim Girr's Cycler Park arena in McKeesport both taking the week off.

At the Meyers Bowl, Monday night, Willie Davies, Charleroi mite, reaches the end of a five years' chase for a bout with Frankie Genaro, of New York, generally recognized as the world flyweight champion, the claims of Corp. Izzy Schwartz, also of New York, to the contrary notwithstanding. Genaro has had plenty of reason to keep away from Davies, who is one of the outstanding little boxers of the world, as he has proved by beating the other contenders up to the point where Genaro has been about the only boxer of prominence in the division who would not meet him. And even in taking on Davies now, Frankie shows his respect for Willie by meeting him at a weight two pounds over the class limit of 112 pounds, so that, regardless of the outcome, he cannot officially lose his title.

MAY LEAD TO TITLE BOUT

Despite the weight conditions, Davies has a lot to gain by beating Genaro Monday night. A decisive victory on points or by any other route over Frankie will make it virtually incumbent on the little Italian to box Willie again with the crown at stake in the not distant future. With so much at stake and in the light of his known penchant for traveling at a dizzy pace in the ring, Davies is apt to put on a fight that will knock the Bowl customers out of their seats—and the management promises that all ticket buyers will get seats this time after what happened last Monday night, when an overflow crowd caused unprecedented confusion in the compact arena.

This bout will mark the debut of Davies as well as Genaro in the North Braddock bowl. Genaro hasn't boxed in this section since back in 1923, when he outpointed Tony Norman in a Milk and Ice Fund feature bout at Forbes Field.

George Pavlick, rangy light-heavyweight, of Johnstown, who defeated Harry Williams, Negro star, so handily at the Bowl recently, returns against Pedlar Palmer, another dusky contender, in the eight-round semi-final. In the two six-rounders, Al Iovino, southpaw bantamweight, of Swissvale, boxes Johnny Haggerty, of Lawrenceville, who is a favorite with the Bowl patrons, while Red Hartley, erstwhile amateur, of the North Side, meets Joey Angelo, of Swissvale. Iovino is subbing for Joey Katkish, who has an injured hand.

HERRERA AT WASHINGTON

Tony Herrera, the Mexican lightweight star, of Chicago, who added Tommy Crawley, of the South Side, to his list of victims at the Bowl last Monday night, meets one Billy Callahan, formerly of Detroit, but now of Jimmy Dime's New Castle stable, in the main bout of Promoter Goodridge's show at the armory at Washington, Pa., Tuesday night, with Lee Sala, of Donora, and Mickey Solmen, of New Castle, boxing the semi-final. Mickey Fedor, of Canton, meets George Perotta, of New Castle, at Butler the same night, and the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C. puts on another of its stirring open-air amateur cards at its California avenue arena.

Young Guido, of Sharon, and Johnny Pial, of Greenville, box the main bout of a show at Conneaut Lake Park Wednesday night, and Tiger Joe Randall, Negro welterweight, of Elizabeth, Pa., who recently repeated his knockout victory over Dominick Profio at McKeesport, boxes Mike Lucas, of Cleveland, in the 10-round main event of the twice-a-month show at Junction Park Thursday night, Patsy Perroni, recently opponent of George Pavlick and Harry Williams, meets Walter Pickard, of Youngstown, in the semi-final.

Jim McGirr, McKeesport promoter, is off on a vacation and will not stage another show until August 22. He is working on a good card for that date and also for August 29.

SCHWARTZ TO BOX GRAHAM

The Meyers Bowl has signed Benny Schwartz, of Baltimore, who recently looked so good in beating Jackie Rodgers at Bridgeville, and Bushy Graham, former claimant of the bantamweight title, for its main bout Monday night of next week and may hook up Tommy Crawley and Phil Goldstein, old local rivals, again for the following week.

Billy Jones, Negro heavyweight, who recently defeated Murray Gitlitz at the New Castle Jolly Bowl, has been signed by Matchmaker Ed Fritz to return Monday night of next week against Rosy Rosales, Mexican Indian. Harold Scarney and Young Florian will meet in the semi-final.

Cuddy DeMarco was knocked out in the fourth round by Ruby Goldstein at Coney Island Friday night. Phil Goldstein, local lightweight, defeated Harry Scott in 10 rounds at Newark, N. J., and Herman Folins, of Ambridge, lost to Johnny Scalzi in eight rounds at Bridgeport, Conn., the same night.

Sammy Mandell was one champion who lived up to form in winning over Tony Canzoneri, former featherweight champion, at Chicago, Friday night. He figured to prove too clever a boxer for the challenger and he was all of that in handily winning the decision.

BAKER MEETS GANS

Two boxers who appeared in main bouts in the only shows held at the Bridgeville Speedway will oppose each other at the Queensboro Stadium, New York, Tuesday night. They are Sergt. Sammy Baker, who knocked out Cuddy DeMarco, and Baby Joe Gans, who won in 10 rounds over Rudy Ceder.

Fighting Dick Pritchard, of the Pittsburgh Lyceum, and Tod Murphy, of the Duke O'Hara Club, of McKeesport, lightweights, will box the main bout of the amateur show at the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., Tuesday night. Other bouts include: Jack Shuster, unattached, vs. Sparky Ewalt, Charvis Club, light-heavyweights; Al Danger, Braddock Library, vs. Jimmy Loizes, Duke O'Hara Club, bantams; Eddie Toluse, Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., vs. Larry Signs, Duke O'Hara Club, welters; Andy Kossell, Braddock Library, vs. Young Pace, Hogan A. C., flyweights; Artie McGivern, Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., vs. Marty Gornick, Duke O'Hara A. C., lightweights, and Johnny Shepler, Hogan A. C., vs. George Flaherty, Duke O'Hara A. C., feathers. The show will get under way at 9 o'clock daylight saving time.

EKLUND WINS MATCH

MELBOURNE, Australia, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Clarence Eklund, American claimant of the world light-heavyweight wrestling championship, defeated George Zarynoff, of Russia, here tonight in a one-fall match. Eklund weighed 173 pounds and Zarynoff, 174.

MANDELL GETS $47,300 PURSE

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Sammy Mandell, world lightweight champion, will receive approximately $47,000 for polishing off Tony Canzoneri in their 10-round title engagement in the Chicago stadium last night. The challenger will be enriched to the extent of $23,150.

These figures are based on the unofficial receipts checked up today by the Illinois State Athletic Commission. The gross receipts were reported to be $136,191.26, with state and federal taxes amounting to $20,428.68. The net receipts with the state and federal taxes deducted amounted to $115,762.58. The total paid attendance, according to unofficial figures was 20,713, with possibly 3,000 complimentary ticket holders.

Mandell and Canzoneri, were understood to have received 60 per cent of the net receipts, with 40 per cent going to the champion and 20 per cent to the challenger.

Mandell was a downhearted winner. He said today that he was not himself and that he would not have blamed Eddie Kane, his manager, if Kane had tossed him out of the ring. The champion appeared to have been overtrained, and his marvelous cleverness alone carried him to victory.

FAILS IN TITLE BID

Tony Canzoneri Lou Fink

MAKES GOOD TRY—Canzoneri, former featherweight champion, made a plucky bid for the lightweight title in his 10-round bout with Sammy Mandell at Chicago, Friday night, but fell short of winning the decision due to Mandell's superior boxing skill and speed. Fink is Canzoneri's trainer and formerly filled the same role for Gene Tunney when the latter was heavyweight champion.

Molla Out On Injury

EASTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Disturbed by rain and lacking its stellar attraction, Helen Wills, the annual women's invitation tennis tournament of the Maidstone Club today concluded the entire first round and most of the second round matches.

Four of the eight seeded stars went out of the first day's play, two by default and two by unexpected defeats. Mrs. Molla D. Mallory, of New York, head of the seeded contingent, was forced to withdraw because of an injured knee, while Marjorie Morril, young Dedham star, was unable to appear because of the conflict between today's match here and the final at the mixed doubles at Seabright.

Evelyn Parsons, tiny California star, provided the day's biggest sensation by eliminating Mrs. L. H. C. Michel, of England, in a straight set match. Miss Parsons hit everything in sight to win by scores of 7-5, 6-4. Miss Parsons fell in the second round before a tried veteran, Mrs. Charlotte Hosmer Chapin, 4-6, 6-1, 7-5.

Mary Greet, of Kansas City, the second seeded player to taste defeat, met a much sterner opponent in Penelope Anderson, of Richmond, Va., a former first 10 player. The Virginia girl was in fine form and won easily, 6-2, 6-1. She scored another fine victory in the second round, eliminating Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn, 6-1, 6-1.

Mrs. Barron caught a tartar in 14-year-old Sarah Palfrey, of Boston, but eked out a victory, 6-0, 7-9, 6-2. In the second round Mrs. Barron scored easily over Marie Fensterer, 6-3, 6-2. Mrs. Covell defeated Nina Skidmore then eliminated Ruth Dailey, 6-3, 6-0.

Miss Goss won her first match from Margaret Blake, 6-1, 6-1 then met Alice Francis, Orange, N. J., star in the second round. Rain stopped their play. Miss Gladman was carried to three sets in her first round match by Mrs. William Endicott, of Boston, winning 6-1, 5-7, 6-2.

STATE BOASTS FINE MATERIAL FOR GRID TEAM

Fifteen Seasoned Veterans Slated to Return for Competition Next Month.

Seven Seniors Among Candidates for Bezdek's Eleven; Practice to Start Sept. 3.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Aug. 3.—One month from today Penn State will begin practice for her forty-third football campaign. The call for first practice will be sent out in two weeks, and some 50 candidates will report on the morning of September 3 for the first day's workouts.

The Lions will be fairly well fortified with seasoned veterans this fall. Fifteen lettermen, seven of them seniors, are among the 50 who will report for the training season. The other eight are juniors who were thrown into the breach last season when reserve material failed to measure up to varsity strength. Among the candidates expected for the training season are:

Ends—Stanley, Kaplan, Edwards, lettermen; Struble, Saltzman, Braddock, Batdorf, reserves; and Turner and Walker, freshmen. The return of Batdorf, who was out of college last year, gives the squad four experienced end candidates for a starter.

Tackles—Ricker, Panaccion, Duvall, Shawley, lettermen; Love, Balmer, Wells, reserves; McMillen, Hamilton, Stempeck, Brogden, freshmen.

Guards—Captain Martin, Zorella, lettermen; Parana, Zeising, Veneroso, Simkins, reserves; Gillard, Hibler, Wahl, Stewart, Horner, freshmen.

Centers—McAndrews, Escbach, lettermen; DeCindis, Bauman, freshmen.

Quarterbacks—Miller, French, lettermen; Snyder, Thomas, freshmen.

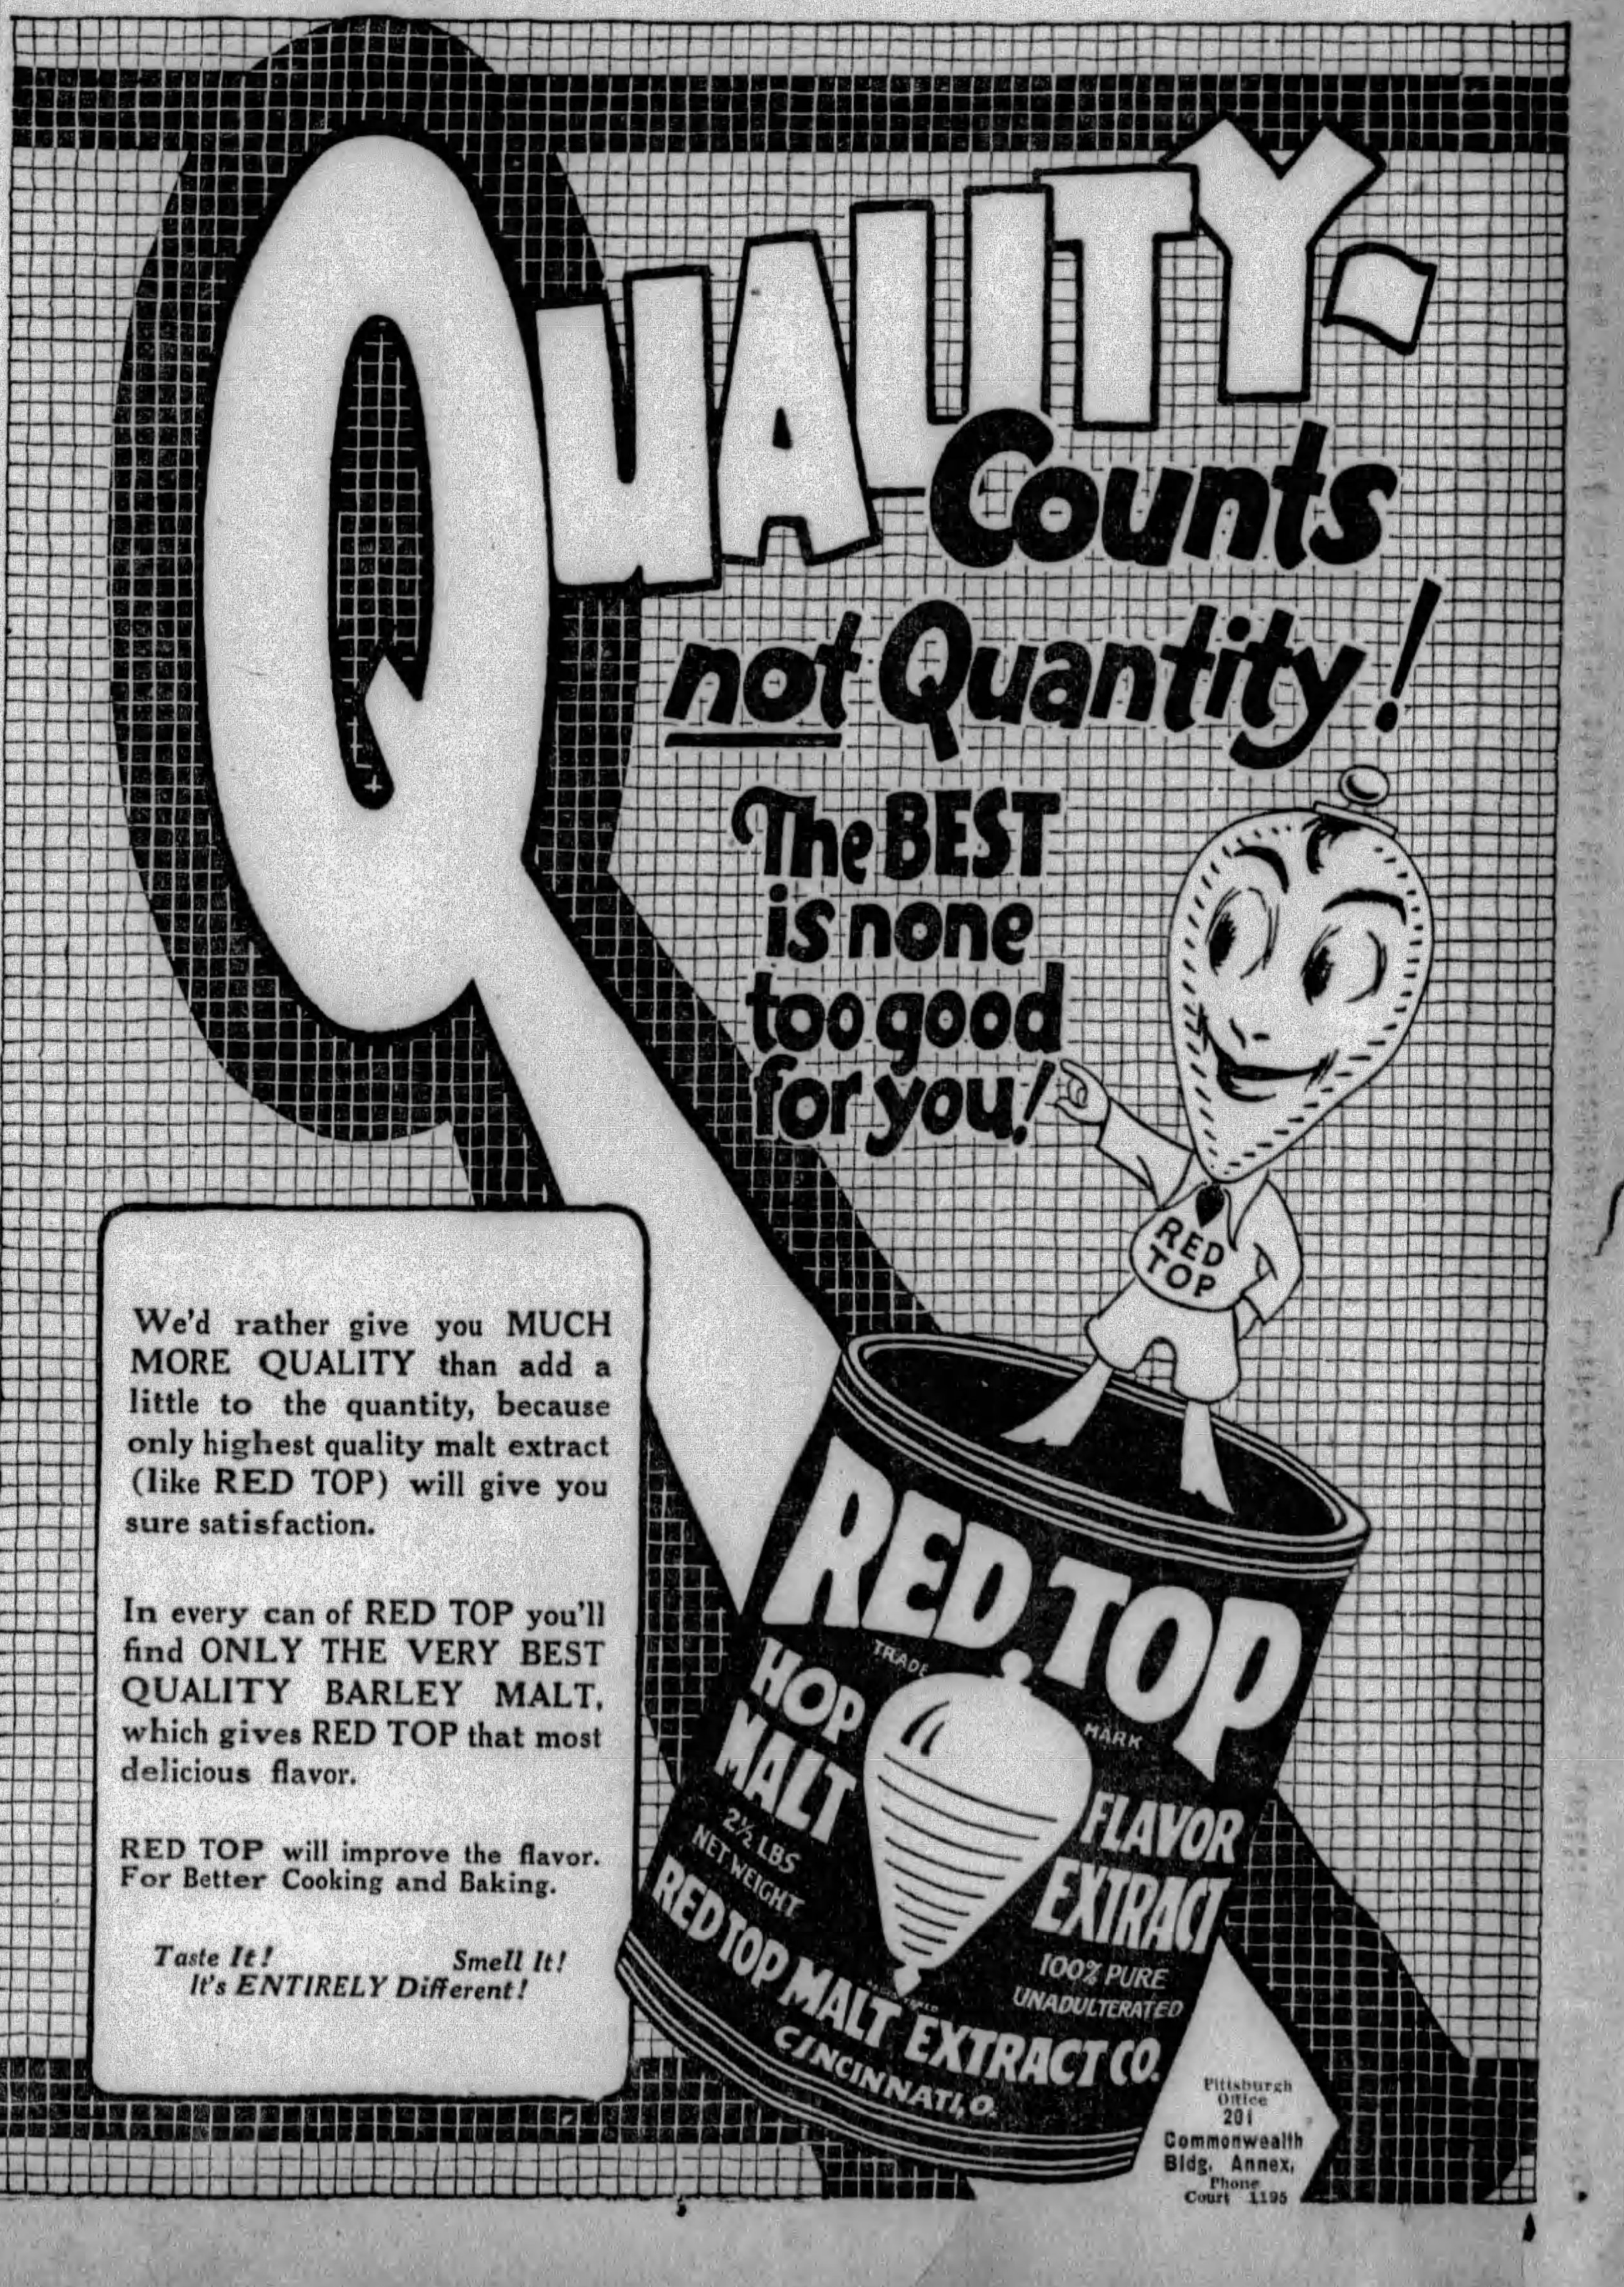
Backs—Diedrich, Evans, lettermen; Weber, Livezey, Hensle, Moonves, Saracinsky, Hayes, Sitek, reserves; Lasisch, Laatu, Lohr, Transue, Crust, freshmen.

The Lions will play a nine-game schedule this season. Six of the opponents were on the 1928 schedule, Niagara University and Marshall College, two newcomers, are booked for preliminary games at home. The complete schedule:

Niagara at home, September 28; Lebanon Valley at home, October 5; Marshall at home, October 12; New York University at New York, October 19; Lafayette at home, October 26; Syracuse at Syracuse, November 2; Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, November 9; Bucknell at home, November 16; Pittsburgh at Pittsburgh, November 28.

TEAM OUT OF LOOP

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 3.—The Clyde team of the Tri-County League, has dropped from league competition because of internal strife. It is expected that President (Lefty) George will call the remaining teams together to rearrange the schedule at once.



Outdoor Sportsmen Near End of Summer Season

SEVERAL MEETS ON LABOR DAY TO CLOSE YEAR

Trials for Sporting Dogs and Rifle Events Attract Attention of Field Lovers.

Many Forced to Enjoy Sport At Fag End Because of Their Vacation Periods.

By GIB MARSH.

Gib Marsh.

AUGUST marks the final lap of the summer season program for those sportsmen who are interested in angling, trapshooting, rifle shooting and tournament casting. Nearly all of the patrons of the rod and reel by the end of this month will have had their session with the bass, muscallounge and salmon, and during this month the national championship trapshooting, rifle and revolver shooting and casting tournaments will be staged.

Labor Day will have on its long program of athletic and other outdoor activities a number of field meets which will include field trials for sporting dogs, trapshooting, rifle shooting and field shooting events, probably the largest of these meets will be the annual affair staged by the Wild Life League of Pennsylvania at Conneaut Lake. With the staging of those events concludes the great outdoor program for the season.

On August 20, the season for the training of sporting dogs will open in Pennsylvania and from that date until the winter holidays roll around there will be held many field trials for bird dogs, beagles and raccoon hounds. September 1, the nimrods will be thinking of the opening of the hunting season, the first event on the hunting season schedule, being the opening of the woodcock season, October 1.

VACATION PERIODS

WHILE August is not regarded as an ideal month for fishing in the Pennsylvania lakes and streams, nevertheless many sportsmen are required to do their fishing at that time because that is their vacation season. However, some sport is always enjoyed, although bass, salmon and the "muskies" seem indifferent about striking, especially during the excessive warm spells.

The experts of the fly and bait casting sport throughout the nation will assemble at Cleveland, August 15 to 18, for the national championship tournament. As that pastime has added hundreds of recruits during the past few years large fields of contestants are expected to take part. Nearly every year some new record is established at the national casting tournament.

This season many handlers of the light rod and fast-moving reel have developed skill at distance casting. At many tournaments this summer throws of 300 feet and over have been common, and it will not be surprising news that the distance casting contest for the ⅝ and ½ ounce plugs will be broken. There are scores of casters who are expert on the accuracy bait casting events, but distance tossers of skill have been rare until this season.

EXPERIENCE NEEDED

THE art of getting off with force a ⅝-ounce plug, attached to a one or two pound line, and maintaining command of the fast-moving reel with the thumb while the plug travels a distance of 300 feet, is not acquired without long practice and experience. Every year the distance tossers are devising new equipment and acquiring new forms for tossing. Formerly it was the custom to use a six-foot light rod in distance casting. Now the best throws are being made with a four-foot stiff rod. The present record is 322 feet for the event, which likely will be shattered at Cleveland.

The national trapshooting tournament will be held at Vandalia, near Dayton, O., August 19 to 24, which will bring together the best wing shots of the nation. Usually the major portion of the clay target contests are won by shooters from Western states. Looking over the records of the national tournaments the names of Frank Wright, of Buffalo; Steve Crothers, Philadelphia; Hank Pendergast, of Albany; Charles Newcomb, of Philadelphia; Fred Plum, of Atlantic City, as victors indicate the exceptions when shooters from Eastern states won. The states of Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Oregon and Nebraska can boast with pride to scores of native sons who carried off honors in past years. The two outstanding winners at national tournaments have been Mark Arie and Frank Troeh, the former from Champaign, Ill., and the latter from Portland, Ore.

Arie has won during his career every event, with exception of the Grand American handicap, on the national program. Troeh has won every event with exception of the handicap contests. Woolfolk Henderson, of Lexington, Ky., is the only gunner of the nation who won the national singles, national doubles and the Grand American handicap at one tournament. He annexed those three titles in 1914. Henderson is often referred to as the greatest all-round shooter of the country. He has retired from national competition, but shoots in the local contests about Lexington.

CIVILIANS TO COMPETE

IN addition to the military organizations, both state and the units in the regular service many civilian rifle and revolver shooters always contest at the national rifle and revolver shooting tournament at Camp Perry. Events are on the program for all high powered rifles from the small bore to the standard gauge firearms. This tournament is conducted under the direction of the War Department and the department erects large comfortable tents to house the contestants during the three weeks of the tournament. Of course the banner event is the team championship, 10 men, and the members of the Fort Pitt Rifle Club, of this city, in 1924, won that title, the only time any rifle shooting organization in the Keystone state was successful.

Of the early field meets the Wild Life League of Pennsylvania has arranged an attractive program, which includes field trials for bird dogs, beagle hounds and raccoon hounds; trapshooting and casting contests. For a side attraction there will be a bench show for sporting dogs. Louis Lautenslager will have charge of the trapshooting tournament which will include contests for Labor Day and Tuesday. In addition to the regular events there will be two special contests for those skilled in field shooting rather than shooting in the standard target events.

Fred McKean, of New Kensington, president of the league, will direct the entire meet. Owners of sporting dogs, trapshooters, patrons of the casting sport are welcome to compete. The best bird dog trials and raccon chases of the early season are always staged at the meet of the Wild Life League.

SECTIONAL CHAMPS—Uniontown's fine junior baseball team which won the Western Pennsylvania title by defeating Erie, 5-0, last week and meets the Central Pennsylvania champions at Harrisburg next Tuesday for the right to play the Eastern Pennsylvania champions at the same place the following day for the State title. Much of the Uniontown team's success is due to the fine pitching of Joe Smith, a young strikeout king. He fanned 13 Erie batters in turning in his whitewash victory. Griffith and Hobit are athletic officers.

Joseph Leads M. A. Batters

WINDBER, Pa., Aug. 3.—Joseph, star slugger of the Charleroi Club, is leading the batters of the Middle Atlantic League, according to averages released today by Elmer Daily, president of the circuit. The league figures reveal that Joseph has appeared at the plate 314 times and has connected for 121 hits for an average of .386.

Only one man is ahead of Joseph in the averages, Binder, of Scottdale, but the latter has appeared in only 33 games. Binder is hitting .515.

Cycle, Auto Races Off

WASHINGTON, Pa., Aug. 3.—Rain forced the postponement until next week of the motorcycle and bicycle races scheduled for the Arden Downs track here this afternoon.

A crack field of riders was on hand for the event, but the steady and heavy rain prevented the races being held. They will be run off next Saturday, weather permitting.

TARENTUM, Pa., Aug. 3.—Rain interfered with Jack Friel's scheduled automobile race on the New Kensington track this afternoon. A heavy shower broke at 2:30, rendering the track unfit for the event.

Friel announced that the race will be held next Saturday afternoon. Both the stock car preliminary and the 100-lap main event will be conducted, with all of today's scheduled starters competing.

ERIE SAILORS WIN IN NINTH

ERIE, Pa., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Dewey Hill's timely hit with the bases loaded in the ninth inning gave the Sailors a 6-to-5 victory over Dayton in the series opener here this afternoon.

Hill's hit broke up a piece of Dayton strategy when Henzes reached first on Vorhoff's error and Manager Acosta ordered Groseclose and Simon passed in order to make a play possible at every base. Hill, however, slapped the first ball pitched to deep center and the game was over. The score:

Farmers Happy As Clubowners Bemoan Weather

International News Service.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 3.

FARMERS were made happy and baseball magnates angry today as rain caused a general postponement of games in the American, National and International Leagues.

In the American New York and Cleveland and Detroit and Washington, the latter pair scheduled for a double-header, were forced to wait for a better day. The Browns and the Athletics, slated to open a series with two games, found themselves running to the dressing room when a cloudburst ended hostilities at the end of the eighth inning.

New York and Pittsburgh were the only clubs washed out in the National.

Rochester at Montreal was the only game played in the International loop.

All games in the Middle Atlantic League were postponed.

WILLOWS CARDS SWIMMING MEET

The Willows Pool Swimming Club will stage the big water gala and bathing beauty pageant at the Rock Bottom pool, Edgewood, next Sunday at 3 o'clock, at which time prominent judges will select "Miss Rock Bottom 1929." The judges who are to make the selection are Dick Powell, master of ceremonies, Enright Theater, C. A. Wakeman, announcer over WCAE, John Jay Burke, city office manager of Allegheny County Parks, A. R. McCall, sales manager for McCrady Brothers and Miss Margaret Wolff.

Many stars are entered in the water meet, Bessie Kucera, senior champion woman diver and Jimmy (Snowball) Ryan will entertain the audience with a series of fancy dives off the high board.

Bob McTiernan, Ray Brehem, Kenneth McKillop and Charles Dunsworth will lead 20 dare-devil divers off the 60 foot cliff in acrobatic dives. A new stunt will be tried off the cliff in which 20 high divers will form a flying wedge and all make the thrilling dive at once.

Fred Gantner of the South Hills is being trained by Norm Cummings to do a spinning spiral off the cliff.

Galmish, the Tech swimmer, will meet Alderisio of Pitt in a 400-yard championship event. Ida Mae Halstead, Jean Wise, Betty West, Virginia Ilsley, Mary Scott, Marie Berkoben, Irene Berkoben and Eleanor Berkoben will give a fancy diving exhibition off the low board.

Contestants wishing to enter the beauty contest are requested to write, Rock Bottom pool, R. D. No. 5, Box 225, Wilkinsburg, or call Penhurst 6878-J.

Williamson Team Quits Legion Series

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Voluntary withdrawal of the Williamson baseball team from competition in the American Legion series and designation of the Huntington team as the runner-up to represent the southern district in the state final at Morgantown next week was announced today by Joe Weiler, state athletic officer of the Legion.

Weiler said the Williamson team withdrew after a conference because one of his players was found to be above the age limit. He said Huntington was named to represent the southern district in the final under the rules as the runner-up.

The Huntington team made preparations to leave tomorrow for Morgantown, where it will meet the West Penn team, northern champion, in a series to determine the state championship.

THE GREATEST POWER—HOPE

Copyright, 1929

"All which happens in the whole world happens through hope. No husbandman would sow a grain of corn if he did not hope it would spring up and bring forth the ear. How much more are we helped on by hope in the way to eternal life!"
—MARTIN LUTHER.

RECENTLY in the great Clinton Prison, in New York State, there was a savage and most dangerous outbreak on the part of the convicts.

They rushed the high walls in the attempt to escape and with difficulty were controlled by the rifles and machine guns of the guards. It is probable that their desperate effort would have succeeded but for the fact that prison authorities had warning of a possible rebellion and were prepared for it.

When the mutiny was over, and the men locked in their cells—some dead, others wounded—this simple explanation was given:

Too many men WITHOUT HOPE, life prisoners or men sentenced to very long terms, were confined together.

The life prisoner sees nothing before him but the dull routine of prison existence, the blank walls that surround the prison yard, and, in the distance, at the end of his prison life, a place and a number in the prison graveyard.

Those life prisoners, and the unusual number of men with them sentenced to very long terms, made a frantic, hopeless effort, because HOPE FOR THEM EXISTED ONLY BEYOND THOSE PRISON WALLS. And death on the spot was preferable to abandoning that hope of freedom.

"Where no hope is left, is left no fear." Milton wrote that, describing Satan defying the Supreme Power that had sentenced him and sent him to everlasting misery.

"Take hope from the heart of man, and you make him a beast of prey."

What we call crime is a product of hopelessness, born of poverty and ignorance.

Those convicts in Clinton Prison, facing bullets from the high walls, themselves unarmed, were "beasts of prey," rebelling against hopelessness.

"Hope is the best part of our riches. What sufficeth it that we have the wealth of the Indies in our pockets, if we have not the hope of heaven in our souls?"

Hope, like the rainbow, has many colors. Each age has its hope, and each good and normal hope brings its happiness and contentment. Of human hopes, the one far above all others in importance, the hope that spreads around the world, distinguishes men from beasts, makes life and effort worth while, is THE HOPE OF IMMORTALITY, illustrated in this beautiful picture.

Old age enters the tomb, and above it, rising to new life and effort, is age restored to youth and vigor.

"Hope will make thee young," said Shelley, "for Hope and Youth are children of one mother."

About sixteen hundred million human beings live on this earth, and this picture illustrates the hope that sustains them, making life endurable for the unhappy, causing those that have lost friends and children to look forward hopefully to death itself.

The greatest of all hope is hope of immortality. To take that hope from the human race would be to wreck human happiness.

Fortunately, to do that is impossible.

You can no more extinguish the hope of a life hereafter in the minds of men than you can extinguish the light that shines in the sun.

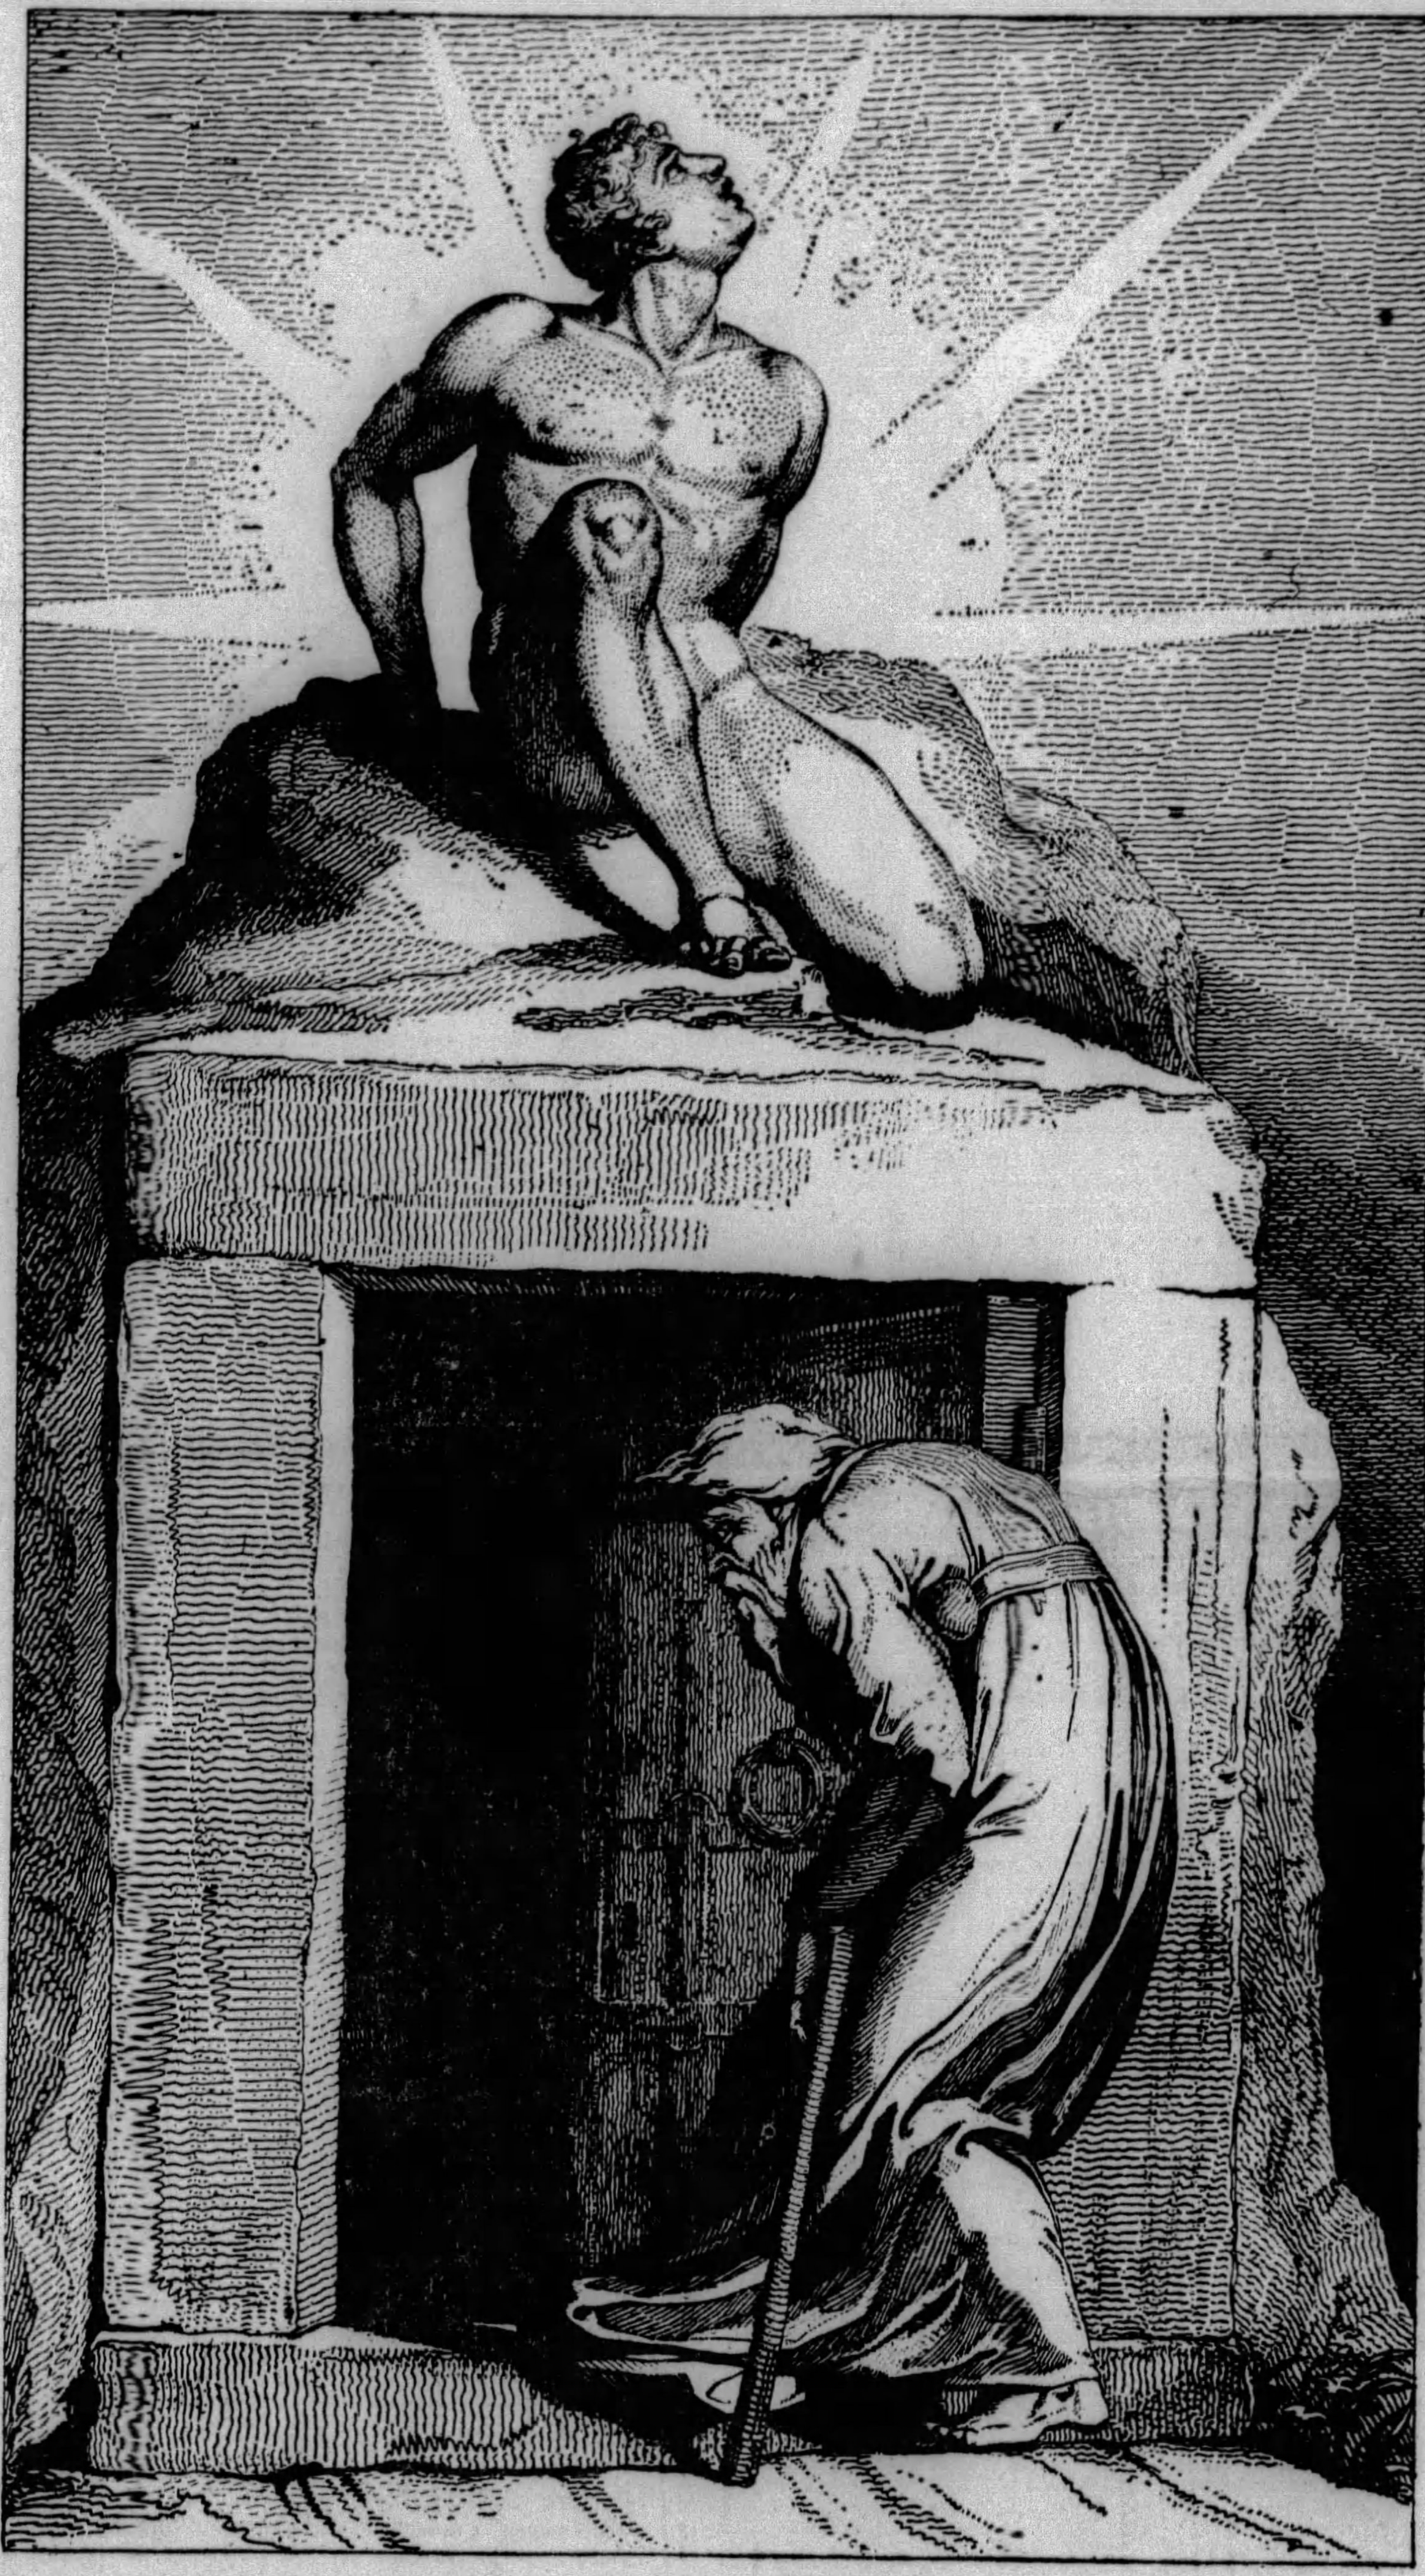
The hope of future life is born in us, lasts through life, outlives our physical strength, comforts old age, inspires youth.



Hope is our strength, our comfort, the mainspring of life and effort. It makes life bearable, takes the sting and fear from death.

Without hope there is NOTHING, and with hope EVERYTHING is possible, all effort is worth while, all sorrow and disappointment can be endured.

This beautiful picture by William Blake illustrates the world's greatest hope—BELIEF IN A LIFE HEREAFTER.

Hope is the food of the soul, the stimulant of the mind, a lifelong comforter.

A mother looks upon her child, and the beautiful expression in her face is born of hope.

An old man whose life has not fulfilled the hopes of his youth, looks upon his son, and there finds a new hope, and complete consolation in that hope.

While hope remains life is worth while.

"Failure will hurt but not hinder us. Disillusion will pain but not dishearten us. Sorrows will shake us but not break us.

"Hope will set the music ringing and quicken our lagging pace.

"We need hope for living far more than for dying.

"Dying is easy work compared with living.

"Dying is a moment's transition; living, a transaction of years.

"It is the length of the rope that puts the sag in it. Hope tightens the cords and tunes up the heart-strings.

"Work well, then; suffer patiently, rejoicing in hope. God knows all, and yet is the God of hope. And when we have hoped to the end here, He will give us something to look forward to for all eternity. For 'hope abideth.'"

When Knox, deeply religious and a hard fighter for his belief, lay dying, too weak to utter a word, faith and HOPE were as strong as ever in his mind, soon to lose sight of this world.

Carlyle describes the scene:

"'Hast thou hope?' they asked of John Knox, when he lay a-dying. He spoke nothing, but raised his finger and pointed upward, and so died."

Develop hope within yourself, not at random, VAGUE hopes, but a hopeful disposition, an attitude of mind that pushes away discouragement, believes in better things here and in another glorious life and opportunity hereafter.

One of the greatest minds born on this earth in the nineteenth century was that of Herbert Spencer.

Yet his last years and his death were inexpressibly sad. He had been a teacher of men—adding to knowledge and spreading knowledge. But for himself, after death, he had lost hope. At the end he was compelled to say, "My intellect does not allow me to hope for anything bur EXTINCTION after death."

Far more enviable is the life of a simple-minded man who does his duty, lives without fame or great learning, but WITH HOPE and belief in Divine kindness and justice.

This picture of renewed youth and hope, rising above the tomb, is a picture of truth—it MUST BE TRUTH.

Man is a feeble creature, but his intellect rules this earth, drains its swamps, irrigates its deserts, replaces wild forests with beautiful gardens.

What the Divine Mind is to infinite space and all its contents, the lesser mind of man is to this little planet rolling in its corner of space.

Why should an intellect as great as that of Herbert Spencer forbid him to hope for a future life?

Is it conceivable that the universal hope of mankind (belief in a future life, in a soul that does not die) is weaker than philosophical doubt, which denies the truth of all that it cannot prove?

A cynical philosopher, when Divine Power was mentioned, said, "I have no need of that hypothesis."

Another, an astronomer, said he had swept the heavens with his telescope, and found no trace of a ruling power in the universe. All not in the least important.

An ant near the edge of Niagara might sweep the landscape and find no trace of man's intelligence. He could not see the great turbines changing water power to electricity, or understand them if he could see them.

It would be useless to try to make him understand machines underground using falling water to light cities and operate factories miles away.

This is A PICTURE OF TRUTH.

If it were not, life would be a farce; virtuous effort a meaningless gesture of repetition; hope a cruel delusion, and life a miserable journey from feeble infancy to helpless old age. Creation would be a heartless cosmic joke, perpetrated at the expense of creatures cruelly inspired with hope and faith, only to be cruelly deceived.

Without hope, without belief in a future life and future opportunity, we should all be like those desperate prisoners in Clinton Prison.

We should feel like dashing ourselves against the wall of hopelessness, seeking at once to end a life meaningless and without purpose.

Fortunately, hope shines forever, and is justified.

Let those that will echo the doubts and fears of philosophical uncertainty.

There is life, opportunity and hope here on earth.

Life and opportunity and greater hope await us beyond the door through which the old man in this picture is passing.

Better than any intellectual doubt of Herbert Spencer are these lines by Whittier. Remember and believe them:

"Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,
Through showers the sunbeams fall;
For God, who loveth all His works,
Has left His Hope with all."

Cohan Play With Small Cast, Sharp Vehicle in Pitt, One Revealing Matured Author

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"WHISPERING FRIENDS," the George M. Cohan comedy which is to be the new week's vehicle of the George Sharp Players in the Pitt, is one of those plays that, in the ordinary course of production, causes the company manager to smile like a taxicab driver when rain comes up suddenly on a day when all the women are downtown. It is one of prized works that requires only a small cast. The advantage to a company manager looking at the salary roll on pay day is obvious. That is, the manager of a touring company. With a stock organization it is different, since the company remains intact from week to week. Such a play, however, does give stock players a chance for a vacation.

For instance, there's Gus Forbes. With two summers in stock and the work of regular seasons, it is said that he has not had a lay-off in more than two years until "Crashing Through" came along. With no part in it for him, and "Whispering Friends," which also has no role for him, coming along to succeed the Henrietta Crosman vehicle, a two-weeks' rest is provided for the popular veteran character actor of the Sharp Company. Some others also get a respite while the Cohan play is on the boards.

"Whispering Friends," considered as a play for a small cast, is almost ideal, with its five characters. In this respect it is related that when it was being presented in Boston one of the competing shows was a musical production. The musical, with heavy overhead, was doing comparatively nothing. "Whispering Friends," with few to pay, was packin' 'em in. Perhaps the matter could be considered one of simple justice, since the musical production has given the purely dramatic one a jolt on so many occasions that plays without melody are held to be considerable of a gamble "on the road," where only the hardiest of them survive.

Cataloguing it as a reflection of a period in the development of an American playwright, it is one of the group of plays that represents a maturer and more ripened view of a man with one of the most interesting histories associated with our native theater. It is one of the efforts entitling the last of the once noted Four Cohans to be known as George M. instead of Georgie, a diminitutive which stuck to him from his infant prodigy days.

ALAN BIRMINGHAM and Leila Hyams in a scene in "Masquerade," principal photoplay in the Harris and Sherican Square. Don't you hope Leila is enjoying her nap?

Comedy of Native Type

It is a comedy of the native type, which is simple enough in theme, a young man without means wedding a wealthy widow, and having to prove that he married for love instead of riches—because "whispering friends" make such a course necessary. The subject seems scant enough, but any man who can make any number of plays out of the American flag, as Cohan is said to have done, successfully, too, can make a play out of anything.

Columbus is not the only discoverer of America. George Michael Cohan is another. His flag-waving complex, in an earier period of his playwriting, perhaps was born in him and became a motivating impulse through seeing so many flags waving on his birthday anniversary, July 4. Anyway, Americanism is nothing to be ashamed of. I remember seeing, a few years ago on the Nixon stage, a travesty that was part of a big musical production. An episode was described and several playwrights, including Eugene O'Neill and George M. Cohan, were supposed to dramatize it, the succeeding action showing the result. O'Neill's was pictured as gloomy and tragic, while that of Cohan had a flag-waving finale. Burlesque, of course, in which neither author had a hand, yet the flag seemed more satisfactory than the tragedy, even though the latter was laughable, too.

George M. Cohan is one of the most remarkable men of the American stage, to which he was born. He is almost remarkable enough to measure up to his own idea of his own importance, from the time he was a youngster onward for many years. In his own book, published a few years ago, he reveals that modesty never was one of his virtues and that his freshness continually kept the family in hot water. He knew he was good. He held tenaciously to that idea even though real bad boys took a delight in punching the nose of "Peck's Bad Boy," as essayed by the non-pride of the Cohan family, when the bad boys met him in the alley leading to the theater.

Further, he clung to it when his sister, Josie, admired as a dancer by many managers, wanted to engage her alone at a greater salary than they would pay the entire Cohan family, because they considered George a handicap. But George knew he was good. And the family eventually decided to sink or swim as a whole, so such managers as wished to engage them had to take Georgie, too. And eventually he showed them that he was good. As a dancer. Later as a song writer. Still later as a writer of music plays and as a flag-waver. Also as an actor. And as a producer. And finally, in his latest period of development, as a playwright with an aim of artistry in a literary way.

His monetary success has been large, and there is no unclean blot on any dollar he ever earned in the theater. All of his productions have been models of propriety. He has shown that success

Plays Called Great Justify Adjective Only Infrequently

By GILBERT W. GABRIEL, Universal Service Dramatic Critic

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

ONCE upon a time, in a war which is at last so far behind us that man can write good literature about it, the machine-gunners used to chain themselves grimly, hopelessly, to their guns. A little of how they felt must be in the souls of drama critics returning and re-chaining themselves to their aisle seats after the summer sabbaticals.

Though, God knows, I've no great growl against the theater world. I rather relish the thought of all the heart-breaks and purple crimes, baby talk singers and beautiful leggeries I'm bound to be witness to, this season. The last pastime I'd choose is sniping bad plays. Merely mediocre ones are a more serious menace, maybe, but I get no sadistic glow from mowing away at them, either.

I hope every theater fills up early and stays filled until next June. Then, even though I'm chained to my machine-gun, I can whittle holes in it and play it like a fife.

At any rate, this is my annual dedication of self and typewriter to a state of good-nature.

Too Much Charity

I've always maintained that a critic's life—provided you grant, of course, that critics ever really live—is one long struggle between his good nature and his good judgment. Nine-tenths of the worst reports about last night's play, any last night's play, will err on the side of enthusiasm or, more disastrous, of charity. Middling good plays can always be sure that at least one or two perfectly sincere reviewers will ease their mental misgivings and their glandular discontent by referring to them as "great" plays.

It was an accepted thing, a few years ago that every fourth or fifth play should be called a great play. You would then see yourself quoted in colors on every billboard and ash-barrel, testifying to that quality of greatness present in at least half of the then current offerings. You created thereby a sort of golden age atmosphere, whereon you yourself rode as its most buoyant and theater-loving prophet.

It is a habit. I still find myself slipping into using that adjective, "great," about once a year. Which is about once too often per year. To tell the truth, I don't know what a great play is. I've seen too few of them to be sure.

Mind Holds Three

In due time I've been witness to the local first-nights of "What Price Glory?" "Strange Interlude," "Juarez and Maxmilian," "The

MATRIMONIAL

BILLIE DOVE, in "The Man and the Moment," Stanley screen feature, becomes a married woman for reasons of convenience only in this picture.

Cohan Comedy Show in Pitt

"WHISPERING FRIENDS" will be the week's offering of the George Sharp Players at the Pitt. The play deals with the wedding of a young broker and a wealthy widow and the friends concoct a scheme to put the bridegroom to a test, to let him prove he didn't marry for money. Then Pauline MacLean essays the role of the widow and the other newly-wed is Kenneth Daigneau. Mabel Kroman, Frances Neilson and Robert Fiske provide the rest of the movement of the play. There will be the regular Thursday and Saturday matinees.

Liberty Show Features 'Drag'

"DRAG," Richard Barthelmess' successor to "Weary River," is the all talking attraction on the Liberty screen this week. Dick is supported by Lila Lee and Alice Day. The plot of the picture concerns a small town newspaper owner who is inveigled into a marriage with the daughter of the woman at whose house he rooms. Lila Lee warns him what is happening but this merely precipitates the wedding. Immediately after the marriage of Dick and Alice, the father of his bride borrows all of Dick's capital to pay the mortgage on the home.

Teutons' Love of Music Makes Voyage Success

By J. FRED LISSFELT.

(Correspondence by Mail.)

ABOARD STEAMER COLUMBUS.

IF anyone doubts the pre-eminence of the Teutons as a music-loving race, let him step onto a trans-Atlantic liner of the Lloyds and closely observe these people for 10 days. Watch them from the drowsy morning aboard ship until the chill of night sends them again to sleep. Every moment of the day they display unmistakable and sincere interest in music, also a willingness to perform in song or at the piano that is as natural as any other function of their daily life.

Imagine yourself in utter comfort on a soft couch, an electric fan keeping a current of air circulating in your cabin. You are swaying in delicious ease with the rocking boat, and beginning to wonder when the steward will bring morning coffee. In the distant corridors you hear not a blatant gong rudely calling you to breakfast, but a trumpeter, whose tone is like velvet, playing that lovely folk song, "In the wood, in the heather, I am a gay huntsman—away, away!" After two verses no one can resist the call, and you follow as the children once followed the Pied Piper. Each morning there is a new song, and you find yourself awaking early and speculating on the morning's program.

Now instead of that terror of the sea, the ship's concert, these people perform each day, not for the benefit of widows and orphans of sailors, nor for the passengers' admiration, but because they must sing, for in this way they are expressing life's joys and its sorrows. Mornings there are band concerts. The same musicians change instruments to become the orchestra at lunch and dinner. There is music from all the operettas, but, mark you, always folk songs, too, melodies that these people have known since infancy, and tunes that come into their everyday life. And they do not applaud their songs, they join the orchestra and sing them on every occasion.

One evening, a baritone, a former opera singer, was good enough to sing from "Tannhauser" and "Pagliacci." How purely nationalistic German singers are was quite obvious. All the medieval poetry of the minesingers was there in all its rich beauty, when he sang Wolfram's songs, but to the Italian prologue he was a stranger. Instead of the pathetic appeal of the clown, he was a

Elsie Janis Steps Down From Stage Star Pinnacle to Plan First Revue for Paramount

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

(Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service.)

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 3.

EXIT Elsie Janis, actress. Enter Elsie Janis, supervisor, director and encourager of Paramount talent. Miss Janis has come to Hollywood, the first person, so far as I know, with the idea of helping others to places in the front row that she herself has occupied so prominently for these many years. She will supervise Paramount's first revue without so much as appearing herself.

"But won't you do just a little song and dance, or that popular imitation of Ethel Barrymore?" I sisted.

"No, I am not ambitious for myself as an actress in the talkies," she said. "I have been on the stage so many years that people will begin to say, 'Good heavens, is that Elsie Janis again? Why I saw her before Maggie was born.' I would much rather have them say, 'Where is Elsie Janis? I haven't seen her for ages.'"

Louella O. Parsons

"You look so young, surely you aren't staging a Sarah Bernhardt farewell," I ventured.

"I don't want to say it's a permanent goodby," she answered, "because some day if the request is loud enough I might want to come back, but I am not going to act in a talkie, that's final."

"You must have a reason," I insisted. "Your imitations would be a sensation. Can't you see how well they would tie up in a revue?"

"Impersonations are the one thing I couldn't be persuaded to attempt before a camera. When I play Bee Lillie I am Bee Lillie. I couldn't stand now before you and do an imitation of her without being self-conscious, because I enter into these impersonations with such seriousness. The camera, I feel sure, would penetrate my disguise and, instead of looking like John Barrymore, I would become simply Elsie Janis."

Miss Janis, who is seen with her mother at so many of the Hollywood parties, is a contradiction of everything we might expect in an actress. Since the day of Mrs. Siddons, we have felt it was gall and wormwood for any stage artist to step aside and make a place for someone else. The stage, the limelight, the applause and all the things that go to make fame so precious are usually jealously guarded and cherished.

There seems none of that professional jealousy in Miss Janis, who is most enthusiastic over her idea to make a

HOOFERS

THE FAIRBANKS TWINS, nifty steppers from the stage, are among the diversions of "On with the Show," talk combination of backstage drama with a revue, on the stage, in natural color, remaining in the Grand, where it is in its third week.

Screen Mostly Audible With Regular Stars of Films in Chief Roles

By MILDRED FILLMORE.

THE summer procession—ritz for parade—of movies presents a mixture of stars and a conglomeration—another 50-cent word—of pictures. Talkers a lot of them are, as might be expected since the screen got vociferous. I mean linguistic—chatty—babble o' tongues and such.

To get at the who's who, what's what and why let's straighten out identities right off the reel—joke, heh, heh—then we'll know which is which. Or ought to, if the reader knows his film dope, which has got slightly jammed since voices began to be more important than faces in the realm of shadows that act. The new week, howsumever, is not so bad. The names are names we all know, or did know in the days when the silent drama was.

Ronald Colman is to be along in "Bulldog Drummond." The Penn has that one. Billie Dove is at or near the head of the parade in "The Man and the Moment," the Stanley booking. So is Buster Keaton, troll of the Aldine film, "Spite Marriage." Joe E. Brown, another oaf, stays on in the Grand, where "The Show Is On" is on. Betty Compson, too. Leila Hyams is to "Masquerade" in the Harris and Sheridan. Dorothy Mackaill is "Classified" with the Enright.

Now these're names that don't cause any wrestling matches with memory, nor scratching of the scalp to stimulate the thinking process trying to remember where an' when we've heard 'em before, as do some of the noms de celluloid that have been sprung on us since the screen learned to squawk.

Some of the titles, too, are familiar. F'rinstance there's that "Bulldog Drummond." We remember that was a play and that H. B. Warner was the chief hector in same. Now the puzzle is—why didn't those movie picture men let a good screen bet like H. B. Warner play the same role in the fillums that he did on the stage. Not that we don't think Ronald Colman will be equally as good, or, possibly, better. Only that it seems to an observer on the side lines—grandstand manager, if you will—that the movies miss many "naturals" such as Warner and "Bulldog Drummond."

With Colman in that hunk o' mystery, chills and thrills, will be Joan Bennett, who recently did a bit in pictures and now is a leading woman. That's heredity for you. Joan's a datter of Richard Bennett, top-notcher among thespians of the stage. Who remembers when her sister, Constance, was a prominent

WE have had engagements. We have had elopments, and we have had pompous weddings in the film colony, but we have never had an engagement that was ballyhooed with such obvious regard for the public eye as the Harry Richman, Clara Bow publicity stunt. It may be a real engagement, but if it is, why in the name of all that's good and holy, is it necessary to put on a show for the benefit of the onlookers? At the Roosevelt Hotel, Harry Richman night, the orchestra played Lohengren's Wedding March loudly, waiting for Clara to make a grand entrance. It was exactly as if a burlesque of the engagement were being enacted.

SEEING the much written about Julia Hoyt dancing in the Blossom Room at the Roosevelt, lunching at the Montmartre and the Brown Derby, and enjoying an after-theater midnight snack at Henry's, brings to Hollywood the Broadway idea stronger than ever. Miss Hoyt, who is the wife of Louis Calhern, Ethel Barrymore's leading man, and who was at one time Mrs. Lydia Hoyt, New York society woman, is the personification of all that Broadway stands for, and, looking at her, you realize that Hollywood is getting all of Broadway's most decorative folk. Miss Hoyt, I am told, was offered two very excellent jobs in the movies, but, because of her Equity affiliations, she was obliged to decline.

KAY JOHNSON has struck a new note in Hollywood film circles. Not since Greta Garbo offered something different in motion picture actresses has there been so much favorable comment as there has been over Miss Johnson's work in "Dynamite." She has all the aristocratic charm of Elsie Ferguson, combined with the soft woman beauty of Norma Talmadge. Elsie Ferguson was always a little hard and there's none of that in Miss Johnson, although her role is that of a member of the gay set. It is only on rare occasions that someone registers as emphatically as this young woman, who came to Hollywood as the bride of John Cromwell, well-known stage director, and remains to win fame on the screen.

AT this time filmland is taking advantage of these warm days by entertaining out-of-doors. There are few nights in Southern California that are warm enough to permit out-of-door dancing and dining. The Richard Barthelmesses started it when they turned their backyard into a night club. Mr. and Mrs. Henry King, in one of the most delightful parties of the season, also invited their guests to come to a buffet dinner served on their spacious lawn. Florence Vidor and her bridegroom, Jascha Heifitz, gave their first large dinner dance as a combined lawn fete and dinner party. Miss Vidor's guests had an exceptional treat when the great Heifitz got his fiddle and game an impromptu concert for an hour or two.

POOR Lon Chaney cannot be sick in peace. From all corners of the globe have come queries asking him if he isn't quitting the films because he fears the talkies. Mr. Chaney is really a very sick man and he has been ordered by his physicians to do no more work until his throat is healed. It is unfortunate that his illness should come at the time when he was quoted as saying he would not make a sound picture. Wallace Beery, who steps into Chaney's place in "The Bugle Sound," will be developed for a certain type of character roles, but it is ridiculous to even intimate that he is being groomed for Chaney's place. The two men are so entirely different.

IDEAS in wickedness have changed with incredible rapidity in the last few years. When "Zaza" was produced first, with Gloria Swanson, the censors all over the country rose up in wrath and denounced the film company for daring to film so salacious a play. Today you won't get a murmur. "Zaza" is snow-white in comparison with the New York plays and with some of the material purchased for the movies. It will be interesting to see Ruth Chatterton's characterization of "Zaza," and no matter how old-fashioned the play is, you may be sure she will put something new and different into it.

LOOKS as if Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has another song hit in "How Should I Know," the theme song of Cecil B. De Mille's "Dynamite." Dorothy Parker, who found only disappointment in Hollywood and who left California with considerable rancor and bitterness in her heart, wrote the lyrics of "How Should I Know" while she was on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot. The Robbins Music Corporation, affiliated with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, are the publishers. This makes the fourth sensational song hit that has come from the M. G. M. lot. "Singin' in the Rain," "The Wedding of the Painted Doll" and "You Were Meant for Me," from "The Broadway Melody," were the others. "Your Mother and Mine" and "The Pagan Love Song" bid fair to play a close second to these other four.

WOTTA NIGHT, wotta night, was the Harry Richman Night in the Blossom Room at the Roosevelt. Mr. Richman converted the Blossom Room into an imitation of the Harry Richman Club in New York, and he called on all the high-priced talent in the room. Believe it or not, most of them got up and did their stunts. There was Belle Baker, Fannie Brice, Charlie King, Charlie Winniger, Ann Pennington, Gus Edwards, Mrs. Lew Anger and dozens of others who are in Hollywood making movies. "Everybody have a good time," said Mr. Richman, "because next week we all go to work. If you don't have a good time it's your own fault." And everyone, including Corinne Griffith, Evelyn Brent and the rest of the celebrities, took Mr. Richman's advice.

Thriller Film Billed at Penn

"BULLDOG DRUMMOND," the mystery thriller, comes to Loew's Penn Theater Monday, August 5, with Ronald Colman as the star. The film based on the stage play of the same name is a 100 per cent talking picture and the first in which Ronald Colman appears as a speaking star. On the stage Wesley Eddy and his gang will be seen and heard in "Honeymoon Cruise," a Loew's stage presentation featuring Joe Penner, late star of "Greenwich Village Follies." Others in the cast include Luella Feiertag, Babe Morris, Joe and Willie Hale, the Honeymoon Trio, Billy Meyers, Gene Ramsey and the Dorothy Burke Girls. Dick Leibert has completed work on another novelty which he will present in his organlogue and Elias Breeskin and the Penn Symphony Orchestra will offer another of their classic overtures. Fox Movietone News will complete the program.

Drama and Farce Varies Plays Booked for Nixon

HARRY BROWN, manager of the Nixon, just returned from New York, announces many attractions for the coming season in the Nixon Theater, which will open on a date to be announced. The Nixon will be under the personal direction of A. L. Erlanger, of New York.

Mr. Erlanger is not alarmed over the talkies and says there will always be legitimate theaters playing high-class attractions with all-star casts of actors and actresses. In a recent interview he stated that he considered Pittsburgh one of the best show cities in the country, and that he had no intention of entering the moving picture field. "I am in the legitimate theatrical business and I shall remain in it as an individual," he said.

Manager Brown said he is sure that the theater-going public of Pittsburgh will realize that Mr. Erlanger shows faith in the legitimate theater and Pittsburgh by the announcement of the stars and attractions booked at the Nixon for the coming season.

The Theater Guild of New York will present six plays. They include: "Strange Interlude," Eugene O'Neill's nine-act play, which has been hailed as the greatest drama written by an American; "Caprice," a comedy of Viennese life, by Sil-Vara; "Major Barbara," a modern comedy, by Bernard Shaw; "Wings Over Europe," by Robert Nichols and Maurice Browne; "R. U. R," a melodrama, by Karel Capek, and "Pygmalion," a Bernard Shaw satire on morality and manners.

The Theater Guild will present each play with the original New York cast and production.

Florenz Ziegfeld will present "Show Girl," with Ruby Keeler Jolson and star cast and 150 girls; "Show Boat," return engagement; "Whoopee," with Eddie Cantor, return engagement; a new musical play, starring Marilyn Miller; musical version of "When Knighthood Was in Flower;" new musical play starring Jack Donahue; musical version of "East is West;" "The Three Musketeers," with Dennis King, return engagement.

George C. Tyler and A. L. Erlanger will present the following plays with all-star casts: "Sweet Land of Liberty," by Philip Dunning, author of "Broadway;" Mrs. Fiske in a new play, "The Mixed Jury," by Fred Ballard; Raymond Hitchcock in a new comedy, "Your Uncle Dudley," by Howard Lindsay and Bertrand Robinson; "House Party," by Kenneth Phillips Britten and Roy Hargrave; "Trevelyn's Ghost," a farce, by Dwight Taylor; "The Rosebush of a Thousand Years," a dramatization by Catherine Chisholm Cushing of a novel by Mabel Wagnalls.

Earl Carroll presents "Earl Carroll Vanities;" "Fioretta," New

Belasco, at 75, Challenges Flops by Trying Again

By BUSHNELL DIMOND.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

DAVID BELASCO passed his seventy-fifth birthday in Atlantic City, where he was attending the birth of his latest production, "It's a Wise Child." What a marvel he is, the "governor," as everyone who knows him well calls him!

Though his hair has been snow white for a quarter of a century, he is vigorous, masculine and merry, not to say industrious. Despite a certain automobile accident and the death of his wife after more than 50 years of happiness, and the "artistic success" (meaning the financial flop) of "Mima," topped by the collapse of the Passion Play venture in which he was interested with his son-in-law, Morris Gest, Belasco comes back in the broiling heat and is the first of the important producers to anticipate the coming season.

"It's a Wise Child" is not as clever as "The Bachelor Father" and is somewhat related to it in method. It might be called "The Bachelor Mother." It will do. New York will take it and it should spend Thanksgiving at home in the Belasco Theater, by which time Beth Merrill and "The Virgin City" will be ready to replace it. That one is reputed to be a little more than warm, with its locale a resort in Virginis City during the grizzled days of the 70's.

Will Try Talkies

Belasco also will wet his feet in the talking movie spring in the Fall. Though he has always despised the silent screen, the newer medium attracts him. He has turned down many glittering offers to direct, but his services are never for sale. With an interest in several coming film productions, however, he will go in for the task.

Aldolphe Menjou, whose break with the squawkies led him to jump the Hollywood reservation, returns from Europe in a few days, and the likelihood is that he will be seen and heard in a play here. He is considering a comedy of movie life, and, stragely, the story is of a screen actor who comes to Broadway to go on the stage and prove he can do more than grimace and strut before a lens.

Contrary to the published yarns that one of the elements of Menjou's fall-out with the picture powers was his insistence that Kathryn Carver, his latest bride, be given the lead in all his activities, he is not demanding that she appear in the projected play. Miss Carver did not click on the silver sheet to any outstanding extent. She is with him abroad now.

Menjou intends to make a sound picture of the play while playing it in the "legit," dispensing with the mid-week matinee and working so many hours daily in a studio on Long Island with the same cast employed in the theater. He would have to if he intends to maintain his scale of income. He earned $5,000 a week in Hollywood, and no dramatic theater could pay him—or anyone—that figure and keep going.

Fabulous tales of huge salaries in the theater are exaggerations.

A few musical comedy stars like Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor, or Marilyn Miller, can command upward of 5,000 weekly, because the box office scale is $6.60 and the weekly gross receipts frequently reach $45,000; but in the legimate houses the top scale is revue of Paramount talent and give each star and each director a sketch in which he can present his own particular specialty.

Elsie Janis Quits Stage To Direct First Revue Of Paramount Players

"I hate to tell what we plan to do," she said, "it sounds so conceited and after all I am a newcomer in the picture field and I am very humbly trying to learn from those who have had years in a studio. But I have definite ideas on what this Paramount revue should be and how we can give the public something different."

Miss Janis' idea is original. Joseph von Sternberg will direct a sketch of the underworld. William Wellman will offer an air number, while Frank Tuttle will have a sophisticated society comedy. The revue, in other words, is to be one hundred per cent Paramount with each star and each director offering his own specialty.

This, incidentally, is the first revue to have a woman in charge. Come to think of it, isn't Elsie Janis the first woman supervisor in the movies? We have had women directors, Lois Weber and Dorothy Arnzer having qualified for this distinction, but so far as I know this is the first time a woman has been in charge of a production.

"When I think of Evelyn Brent with her beauty and her ability, Mary Brian with her sweet youngness, Nancy Carroll with her radiant personality and all of the famous players stars who will be asked to do a number, it seems to me there is no reason for importing a lot of outside talent. There is plenty here in Hollywood," Miss Janis said.

York musical comedy, and "Sketch Book," a new musical comedy.

Charles B. Dillingham presents Fred Stone, Dorothy Stone and Paula Stone in a new production, "Cinders and Stepping Out."

George M. Cohan presents "Gambling," and a new musical play with a star cast.

David Belasco presents "It's a Wise Child," a three-act comedy, by Laurence E. Johnson; Beth Merrill in a new play; "Stratford-Upon-Avon Festival Players," Shakespearean repertoire; "Hello, Daddy!" musical comedy, with Lew Fields and all-star cast; Lew Leslie's "Blackbirds," New York's snappiest revue; Bert Lytell in the romantic melodrama, "Brothers;" Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee," the New York musical comedy hit.

Vincent Youmans presented his latest musical comedy success, "Great Day."

Jed Harris presents New York's biggest success, "Front Page," and "Dracula," the vampire mystery play.

Horace Liveright will present two new plays; New Jacobs presents his new musical play, "Glory Bound," George McGregor's new musical play, "Pirate Prince," and "Lady Fingers," a musical comedy; John Golden presents Francine Larrimore in "Let Us Be Gay," by Rachel Crothers. Eva Le Gallienne in "Repertoire," Murray Anderson's latest success, "Almanacs."

The Nixon Theater will be newly decorated and renovated for the opening.

'On With Show' Held at Grand

"ON WITH THE SHOW," Warner Brothers' all natural color all talking hit has been retained for a third week at the Grand. The plot of the picture concerns a show, produced on a shoestring, which is being headed for Broadway and the difficulty of keeping it going. The box office is robbed, but the show goes on. Part of the action takes place backstage. The rest of the time the revue is presented as seen by a first night audience. Ethel Waters croons in the manner for which she is famous. Joe N. Brown, Sam Hardy and the Four Covans are presented. There are many musical numbers, the more predominant of which are "Am I Blue," already famous, "The Land of Let's Pretend" and "Don't It Mean a Thing to You."

CLOWN

HARPO, one of the Four Marx Brothers, will clown in "The Cocoanuts" at the Regent, the Rowland, Mt. Oliver and the Garden.

$4.40, the capacities are generally smaller, and even a huge success rarely tops $25,000.

Stars of high standing usually get a guarantee against 10 per cent of the gross. Thus, if they average $2,000 weekly they are doing exceptionally well. And who wouldn't be?

One of the few Hollywood heroes who ever made good in the Broadway sector is Bert Lytell, who, in "Brothers," is about to reach a year's run. While this piece never attained huge grosses, the cut rates and a steady "upstairs demand" have kept it alive. Lytell plays both brothers, and plays them from the ground up. Lytell, of course, was an actor before he went celluloid, making his big hit in "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Mulhall Star In 'Twin Beds'

"TWIN BEDS," the screen version of the famous stage farce is the all talking attraction in the Olympic this week. It is the first picture in which Jack Mulhall has been starred. He is supported by Patsy Ruth Miller. Jack is cast as a song writer and musical comedy producer who through an accident meets Patsy, a telephone girl. They promptly fall in love and arrange to be married, but Patsy insists on a trip to Europe and twin beds in their apartment. Jack objects to the first on economic grounds and to the second on general principles.

Feature Bills At South Hills

MONDAY and Tuesday, the Harris South Hills Theater will present a 100 per cent dialogue program featuring Maurice Chevalier in "Innocents of Paris. Sylvia Beecher, George Fawcett and Margaret Livingston support the French star. Wednesday and Thursday the Four Marx Brothers will appear in "The Cocoanuts," aided by Mary Eaton and Oscar Shaw. Friday and Saturday "The Man I Love," a 100 per cent talkie with Richard Arlen and Mary Brian, will be shown.

Regent Offers Cocoanut Hit

"THE COCOANUTS," the screen version of the musical comedy success of the same name, starring the Four Marx Brothers, Mary Eaton and Oscar Shaw, comes to the Regent for a week and the Roland for three days as the all-talking attraction. The Marx Brothers, Groucho, Harpo, Zuppo and Chico, are cast in the roles they portrayed in the original stage production.

Marx Brothers On Garden Bill

MONDAY, Tuesday and Wednesday the Garden will present the four Marx Brothers in "The Cocoanuts," featuring Oscar Shaw and Mary Eaton. Thursday, Friday and Saturday Baclanova, Richard Arlen and Mary Brian will be seen in their first all-talking picture, "The Man I Love."

Plays Listed as Great Live Up to Adjective Far Too Infrequently

Plough and the Stars," "Perierie," "The Captive," "Volpone" a la Zweig, "Journey's End" . . . or name your own favorite. I can't remember, but three of them I've been so rash as to call great. I wonder if two of those three deserved it. And which of the two? I'd bet on neither, now.

There is a great deal of use—and misuse, mostly—nowadays of that phrase, "The Pathos of Distance," which Huneker was won't to quote sublimely well. So far as the recent theater seasons hereabouts are concerned, I think there's a great deal more pathos of nearness. Fairish plays are almost always overpraised—and that's their tragedy. Bad plays are quite always condoned—and that's their truly bad luck. It is never a favor to either a play or playwright to douse some slight, handy little piece of commonplace in superlatives.

Thank you, but hereafter let's leave it to the next decade to call this year's best play great. If it lasts that long it may be.

All of which seems at a wide and cranky tangent from any aforementioned resolution to become a steadily good-natured critic. But it isn't, really. It is the hilarity of shooting off one's head in praise of one play that makes you most Katzenjammerish against the next. Waste a wild hooray and you find yourself forced to throw seven ughs in after it in the ensuing fortnight.

I've been looking over the proposed plays of this new season. You never can tell what handsomely wrapped duds there'll be among them, or what unsuspected bursts of young genius will enflame the far-flung ramparts of pure art; but, putting together all the promises and apologiae, credos and creditors, it looks like a pretty good time ahead. And it doesn't look as though there were a single disturbing masterpiece among them. This may be a very kindly time to resolve never again to use that adjective "great."

Never all this year. Well, all this August, anyhow.

And, so saying, I offer my right wrist to the Messrs. Shubert, my left ankle to the Theater Guild, and go back into my chains. I trust they will not be too hard on a summer's sunburn.

flickerite?

That very feminine film femme with the masculine name, Billy Dove, is to have an Elinor Glyn thing for her moments on the Stanley screen, "The Man and the Moment" being the filmese translation of a Glyn novel, in which a "marriage of convenience" is a motivating influence with the shadows passing in and out of screen range. Brooke Johns, who has just finished his debut gesture on the Stanley stage, is to get into his regular stride as "The Man of the Moment" in "Hello, Everybody."

Which brings us over to the Aldine, where the first all-sound-talk program of Pittsburgh screen history is promised. Ears as well as eyes will have to be tuned in for the whole dern bill, news, shorts and feature. The "all" complex of management impels it to state that the program will be all-star as well. The particular star, of course, is Buster Keaton, whose "Spite Marriage" is the flicker feature, with Dorothy Sebastian as the heart interest.

"On With the Show," they tell us, is making a record in the Grand, said record being the drawing of more customers than any picture exhibited there under the extended run policy. Well, it has novelty for one thing, being the first musical talkie in natural color. It has names for another—names like the aforesaid Brown and Compson as well as those of Sally O'Neill, Fairbanks Twins, Louise Fazenda and Sam Hardy.

Leila Blonde Cutie

Leila Myams, one of the blondest cuties of the screen, is the star of "Masquerade," which is the say-so in both the Harris and the Sheridan Square. The picture masquerades in fact as well as in title, the name being the film disguise of Louis Joseph Vance's "The Brass Bowl." Its featured male is Alan Birmingham, a stager. The dope has it that he has been a leading man with Eva Le Gallienne. Believe it or not. And what of it!

The Enright is to have Dorothy Mackaill, whose other half, picturesquely speaking, was Jack Mulhall. The halves have made a couple of pictures separately and Dorothy's is titled "Hard to Get." The other half is on the screen for the week, too, as will be noted later. "Hard to Get," when it was a printed tale, was classified as "Classified" by Edna Ferber, its author. Walter Hiers, once popular screen comic, is a "personal appearance" individual in the Enright program.

Jack Mulhall and "Twin Beds" will be the Olympic offering. Richard Barthelmess will be in the Liberty in "Drag." The durable "The Cocoanuts," with the Marx Brothers, is to be spread upon four silver sheets in the Garden, Regent, Rowland and Mt. Oliver. The South Hills will have Maurice Chevalier in "The Innocents of Paris."

Marx Boys on Mt. Oliver Bill

THE Four Marx Brothers in their Broadway musical comedy success, "The Cocoanuts," will be seen at the Mount Oliver-Harris theater Monday and Tuesday of this week. The theme song, written by Irving Berlin, "When My Dreams Come True," is sung by Mary Eaton and Oscar Shaw. Wednesday night has been set aside for Texas Guinan and her "Queen of the Night Clubs," a 100 per cent talkie which includes the following stars: Eddie Foy, Jr., Lila Lee, John Miljan, Jack Norworth and John Davidson. On Friday and Saturday George O'Brien will be seen in "Masked Emotions," aided by Nora Lane and Farrell MacDonald.

Star in Stanley Is Billie Dove

BILLIE DOVE in "The Man and the Moment" is the current talking attraction at the Stanley. The picture is the screen adaptation of Elinor Glyn's famous novel. The plot of the picture revolves around Billie's marriage "for convenience only." On the stage Brooke Johns starts his first week as master of ceremonies. A few weeks ago he was starred in the "Follies" and also gained fame as the banjo-playing partner of Ann Pennington.

Buster Keaton Weds at Aldine

"SPITE MARRIAGE," Buster Keaton's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, with synchronized score and sound effects will be the attraction at Loew's Aldine. "Spite Marriage" is a story of backstage life with Keaton as a love-sick tailor who invades the theater for love of an actress. A yacht wreck, a chase by some determined rum runners and other comical thrills embellish the story.

COMIC

WALTER HIERS, prominent comedian of the films is to make a personal appearance in the Enright stage acts.

commanding German. The contrast was amazing.

Two Swiss girls, with broad dialect, sang entrancing songs with yodle obligato. Americans hid their smiles, but as the singing continued they were obviously embarrassed, and finally fascinated by the deep emotion of these girls, who sang of their Swiss hills and pastoral valleys. The conversion was astonishing.

A Chinese student gave a whirlwind exhibit of sword dancing—rapid, alert, angular movements, each pose a new design in line. It was the Orient of 3,000 years ago, a picture from that civilization which occidentals choose to ignore. It was art which exhibits to us the culture of a silent race, who can speak to us through only that medium.

Dual Rôle Seen In Masquerade

"MASQUERADE," a Fox Movietone all-talking comedy drama, opens a week's engagement at the Harris and Sheridan Square Monday. Alan Birmingham portraying a young New York man-about town, and a notorious society bandit. Maitland is intrigued by a "lady burglar" who loots his apartment, and seeking adventure helps her rob his own safe, telling her he is the notorious bandit. The real bandit steps from behind a portiere with a gun at this point, and demands the Maitland jewels just taken from the safe.

and cleanliness can be co-partners on many occasions and in many productions, ranging from "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," the original star of which was Fay Templeton, now of Pittsburgh, to "Little Nellie Kelly," in the musical line, and from "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" to "Whispering Friends" on the strictly dramatic side.

"Whispering Friends" was produced by the author in 1928. The fact that it has few characters is not to be held detrimental to the maintenance of interest. Numerous delightful plays have had but a small number of characters. A notable one was "Tea for Three," one of the greatest successes of the year it was produced, which had only the number of characters indicated in its title. The late Margaret Lawrence played the only feminine role in it. Last season a full length play with but two characters was staged in New York.

Stage attractions of the week also include the presentations in the Stanley, where Brooke Johns, new master of ceremonies, who is greeting the patrons with a whole lot of pep, will introduce the acts of a production staged under his own supervision; and in the Penn and Enright, where Wesley Eddy and Dick Powell, respectively, head offerings of specialties.

Miss Mackaill Star in Enright

"HARD TO GET," Dorothy Mackaill's first starring picture and her first all-talking vehicle is the screen attraction at the Enright this week. The film is the screen adaptation of Edna Ferber's famous novel, "Classified." Dorothy portrays the role of a mannequin who wants to marry a millionaire. She succeeds in attracting one, but her brother introduces her to a poor man with whom she falls in love. Through a misunderstanding they part. All ends well, however. Another feature will be Walter Hiers' all-talking comedy, "Hot Lemonade."

ROPING the NEWS - by Will Rogers

"Great Boy, Young Mr. La Follette"

WELL, all I know is just what I read in the papers, and what I run into hither and yon. You know I like to make little jokes and kid about the Senators. They are a kind of a never ending source of amusement, amazement, and Discouragement. But the Rascals, when you meet em face to face and know em, they are mighty nice fellows.

It must be something in the office that makes em so honery sometimes. When you see what they do officially you want to shoot em, but when one looks at you and grins so innocently, why you kinder want to kiss him.

We got a young fellow in there that you have all heard a lot about, and maby lots of you never met him personally, although you would like to. Well thats the way I was. I had always admired his Father, for he was a real fearless Fighter, with a world of ability. I expect he was admired more by his enemies than any man we ever had in public life. For they knew that he was on the level. Now its a funny thing about offsprings in the human race.

It's not like its animal neighbor. A race horse is almost sure to breed another race horse. He may not be as fast as the old Father Horse, but he will show a lot of speed nevertheless, and Dogs follow along in the wake of their ancestors. You take a couple of pretty well bred Airdales and you can rest assured you are not going to get a Pot Hound. But with the Human race you may just as well throw your register book in the creek, for what the mating brings forth no human mind can even guess, much less be certain of. You are just liable to have some fine old stock bring forth a family of human Mutts as to produce an amateur Lincoln.

That's one of the main places where the Human race differs from the purely and totally animal. In nearly every other respect, the human race is just about on a par with its animal brothers. Given the same conditions they will both do about the same thing. In intelligence they run about even; in self preservation, they are 50-50. The animal will kill to improve its food supply just about as quick as the human.

The animal is about as untrustworthy as its 100% Human brother. So if it wasent for the breeding why there would be no reason to distinguish one from the other. We would just be classed as another breed of Cats, or Bears, or some other Species. But on account of us being so uncertain as to what we will produce why we are, known as the Humans.

Human comes from the old Spanish word "Huber." Huber's used to be a Museum on 14th Street, New York. And they had everything in there, and from there they gradually got to calling people, Humans. It's just a name and has practically no significience at all.

Ancestors dont mean a thing in our tribe. It's as unreliable as a political promise. Able bodied Newfoundlanders produce Scotch terriers in the breed Human. A western range Mare is liable to produce a Man of War in our strata of existence. You just dont know what will happen. You just have to raise em up till they are 22 or 23 and then start guessing. They no more take after their father and mother than a Congressman will take after a good example.

Mind you, I am not in the least criticising all this, for its like everything else; its for the best. If this Country did take after its Fathers, God help it. It's because most of them are an improvement over their Fathers is why we have such low taxes, good radio announcers, and Farm Relief.

But every once in awhile we get ahold of a great Father who begets a great Son, and this offspring I am referring to is of that very type. He looks mighty like he was going to pick up the old man's pack and carry on with it. I had met him before, that is casually. It was in a crowd and I dident want anybody to know that I knew a Senator.

But the other day he come up to my place with his Brother in Law, and a friend of mine, Mr. Middleton the Playwright, and I had the pleasure of knowing and chatting for two or three hours with Young Senator Bob La Follette, of I think it's Wisconsin, or Minnesota, (I always get those two mixed up) But wherever it is, its where Glenn Frank has charge of a experimental Labratory, and instead of using Guinea Pigs, they use Football Players.

Well sir, this young fellow and I took up the Government business, just where it should be taken up, which is at the source, and I wish Coolidge and Hoover could have heard us. They would have learned something to their advantage. This Boy has got a lot of the old Father in him. He knows there is a lot "Hooey" in Washington and they know that he knows it. I heard him make the best speech that was made at the Republican Convention in Kansas City. I dont know what he was doing there, he would have fit in just as well at Houston.

He has a lot of ideas that on account of their merit wont get anywhere, and he is smart enough to know they wont probally be adopted for 20 years. But he must get a certain kick out of suggesting them first. He is just the most pleasant congenial, square thinking fellow you ever met. He dont feel that he has any great work to carry on. Has no cause. He was born and bred in Politics and knows you must give lest you wont receive. He takes it serious but not solemn.

Its just a pleasure to meet and spend the hours with him. He dont think the Country is going to H...., But he sees no reason why we shouldent.

My Wife as usual summed him up in one remark, "That fellow would have made good in a legitimate business."

Tennis Court Is Nice When It's Finished

Mr. Smith spent all afternoon around the court with a hammer and nails and tapes and a paper of directions.

IT WAS agreed by all the Smith family when they took their Lake Shore bungalow for the summer that it was a great thing to have a tennis court. The fact that the ground was a little bit cramped, and that there wasn't much room between the end of the court and the cedar trees, didn't matter. After all, tennis is tennis. You don't need an absolutely first-class court just for ordinary summer play. You can have all the fun you want on just a plain bit of grass, leaving to the professionals the high-class clay courts and all that sort of thing.

In other words, there is no doubt of the enthusiasm of the Smith family over having a court. The fact that they never played on it during the summer is not to be put down to any lack of enthusiasm.

THE court as they found it in May was naturally in rather poor shape. It had a lot of coarse grass in it and there was a good many large stones, almost boulders, in the ground.

But as Mr. Smith—the head of the family—said when he came out for his first week-end, the only way to get rid of the boulders was to take your coat off and get to work at them. He said that in business a man learning the habit of going right at a thing; the more difficult it was, the better it was to get at it without delay.

Mr. Smith took his coat off and got to work with an iron bar to take the stones out. At the end of the afternoon he had scratched around four stones, partly lifted one, and partly dislocated his shoulder.

Next day he said he had no time to go on with it, and so Mrs. Smith said she would get a man to come and do it. As in most families, whenever it was found that Mr. Smith tried and failed to do anything, they sent and fetched a man, a real one, and he did it.

So Mrs. Smith got a man and he took out the stones, and got a man to mow the grass with a sickle and run a lawn-mower over it, and got a man to trim back the cedar trees a little at the end of the court.

By the end of the second week in May the man had the court all ready, except just marking it. But Mrs. Smith told the man that that didn't matter; her husband or her sons would mark the court.

It turned out this was the fatal error.

MR. SMITH undertook first to mark the tennis court when he came up in May. Mr. Smith is a methodical man. When he does things, he does them right. He is fond of saying that when you take over a job, either do it well or don't it at all. He claims he owes a great deal of his business success to this simple maxim.

Mr. Smith said that to do the court properly he must first cut a set of little pegs, so as to put in one at each intersection of the lines. By this means you knew where you were at.

To cut the pegs, Mr. Smith needed to make use of a small hatchet, and he found the hatchet too dull to do the work properly. Get your tools into good shape, he used to say, and your job is half done.

So Mr. Smith undertook first of all to sharpen up the hatchet. That involved fixing up the grindstone so as to make it turn properly without wobbling. If your grindstone doesn't turn true, you'll never get a proper edge on your tool . . . When the day closed Mr. Smith was looking for some turpentine to clean a file, to file a saw, to cut a board, to make a stand for the grindstone. The court was still not marked. Mr. Smith went back to town that Monday. Attack number one had failed.

THE next attempt to mark the court was made by Wilfred Smith, eldest son of the family, just after his return from college, where he had taken a brilliant course in mathematics.

Wilfred said that there was no difficulty about marking a tennis court if you just applied a little mathematics. There was no need to cut a whole lot of pegs; all you wanted was a couple of straight lines with a right angle between them and then to remember that the square on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum of the squares on the two sides. This proposition, Wilfred says, dates back at least to Pythagoras and was probably known to the ancient Egyptians. The help that it affords in marking a tennis court is quite obvious. If the court is 36 feet wide and 70 feet long, all you have to do is to take the square of 36 and add to it the square of 70 and then take the square root of what you get. This will be the cross distance and will exactly locate the bearings of the court.

It was 11 a. m. when Wilfred Smith began ciphering. At twelve he was still at work. At twelve-thirty he broke off to try and hunt up a book that showed how to take the square root of anything. He couldn't find it. There were very few books in the bungalow and not even a life of Pythagoras. Wilfred worked on at the problem that afternoon. Finally he worked out the square root by algebra. He said that it was a complicated process, but that it could be done. When he got the result, it showed that the cross distance from corner to corner on a tennis court is a little over a quarter of a mile. This would have put the tennis court away out in the lake. Wilfred quit. And, anyway, he had to go away next day to attend his college commencement and receive his honor degree in mathematics.

Attack number two had failed.

THE next attempt to make the tennis court was made just at the end of June by Renee and Gene, the two girls of the family. They just got an old broom and a big pot of whitening and water and had the whole thing done in half an hour. Unfortunately they put three courts on each side of the net instead of two. This meant that the court couldn't be played on, but Mrs. Smith said it didn't matter as they would only have to wait till the rain washed out the lines.

All July it didn't rain. It rained everywhere else, but not at the Smith's bungalow. There was a cloudburst at Texas, and in British India they had the wettest season in 50 years.

But it didn't rain at the Smith's bungalow.

AT THE beginning of August when at last the whitening disappeared, the two little Smith boys marked out the court one evening after tea. Unluckily they used flour by mistake and dogs came in the night and ate the service line.

After that Mr. Smith learned that the simplest way to mark a tennis court is to buy tapes, all ready joined and numbered. You nail these to the ground and there you are. No one, it seems, uses whitening any more, once he has got on to the idea of the tapes. Mr. Smith got the tapes and spent all of one afternoon crawling around the court with a hammer and nails and tapes and a little paper of directions which said: Lay down the point A at a rectangular distance from B, and so on. When Mr. Smith got the first half of the court done, he realized that he had nailed it all down crosswise instead of lengthwise. So he said, "Oh, hec," and pulled up all the tapes and threw them into the garage.

London Food Is Aid in Dieting

MUTTER—Well, well, Mr. Mumble, you look hungry.

MUMBLE—Yes, I just came out of a London restaurant.

MUTTER—Didn't their table please you?

MUMBLE—The table was all right, I didn't like what they put on it.

MUTTER—One has to become accustomed to English cooking.

MUMBLE—Maybe so, but it's too bad that I've got to be the one.

MUTTER—You ought to try the A. B. C. restaurants.

MUMBLE—I don't care for alphabetical soup.

MUTTER—Have you noticed any Lyons' eating houses?

MUMBLE—No, I haven't noticed any lions eating anything.

MUTTER—You're too early for dinner. Londoners very seldom eat before nine o'clock.

MUMBLE—I don't blame them for putting it off as long as possible.

MUTTER—They don't think much about their meals in England.

MUMBLE—I don't think much of them myself.

MUTTER—You ought to try a portion of cold pigeon pie.

MUMBLE—I did try it, and if that was pigeon, the next time I go in there I'm going to order the dove of peace.

* * *

MUTTER—You can find worse cafes than that in London.

MUMBLE—That's silly; who wants to find worse ones?

MUTTER—I had some scones with honey this afternoon.

MUMBLE—Is that so? Have you found a dame already?

MUTTER—This was bee's honey.

MUMBLE—Yeh? Who's Bea?

MUTTER—Listen, I'm not worrying about women, when I married my wife I promised to love, honor and obey.

MUMBLE—So did I, but I reserved the rights for foreign countries.

MUTTER—I'd like to see myself with a dame.

MUMBLE—Are you bragging or wishing?

MUTTER—You aren't looking for girls already, are you?

MUMBLE—No, I'm still hunting for dining rooms.

MUTTER—I think you miss America.

MUMBLE—I'll say I do. I'm homesick for a good old-fashioned Greek restaurant.

MUTTER—Personally, I'm on a diet.

MUMBLE—I don't blame you; it's a pleasure to fast in this country.

MUTTER—Don't be so sarcastic. They could cook worse.

MUMBLE—Maybe so, but it would take a lot of practice.

MUTTER—London is a great place. There's lots to see over here.

MUMBLE—Sure, plenty for the eye, but nothing for the stomach.

MUTTER—Good food! That's all you talk about. You've got good food on your brain.

MUMBLE—Yeh, and I wish I had some on my palate.

MUTTER—You never hear the English people fighting about their meals.

MUMBLE—Maybe they're too weak.

MUTTER—When it comes to restaurants, you can't beat the United States.

MUMBLE—You said it. I realize now why the Pilgrims went to America.

MUTTER—Don't be silly. There were no restaurants in New York in those days. Everybody had to go and get their own food.

MUMBLE—Sure, that's how cafeterias originated.

MUTTER—If you really want something to eat, why don't you try the Savoy Hotel?

MUMBLE—I would if I thought I could digest it.

MUTTER—The chef there is fine and I'm sure you'd like him.

MUMBLE—Thanks just the same, Mr. Mutter. I may be hungry, but I'm not a cannibal.—That is, not yet.

Vacations Nice During This Month—at Times

I LOVE AUGUST.

August is a great month for vacations.

Vacations were invented by King Krabb in 1478 A. D., as a result of a complete failure of the customary modes of torture on a heretic named Isidor Kalbfleisch. According to the story, they had tried everything on Isidor—the rack, the thumbscrews, the slow fire, the hot boot. Nothing had worked. Isidor just wouldn't confess. Finally, one of the younger inquisitors had a big idea, and, after several conferences, the Committee on New Ideas voted to try it out. So Isidor was taken down off the rack, his joints put back in place, and he was brought into the office of the Chief Torturer.

"Good morning, Isidor," said the Chief, wit a cheery smile.

"Good morning, Chief," said Isidor, looking around for his nearest exit.

"Isidor," remarked the Chief, "you don't look very well to me."

"Well, to tell you the truth, Chief," said Isidor, "I don't feel very well."

"H'mm," h'mmed the Chief. "What seems to be the matter?"

"I don't know," replied Isidor. "I have headaches—and spots in front of my eyes—and my joints hurt. I tell you what, Chief," he continued, "I don't want to compain, you understand, but there's an awful draught on that rack—honest, I'm sneezing all the time I'm on it."

"Isidor," said the Chief, "what you need is a vacation."

Isidor trembled.

"Yes, Chief," he replied, "what's that like?"

* * *

"WE WANT you to take your family," said the Chief, "and go down to the seashore for a couple of weeks—maybe a month. We'll pay all your expenses, of course."

Isidor seemed a little doubtful.

"My family, Chief?" he asked.

"Of course," replied the Chief heartily. "You don't see nearly enough of them, man."

"I suppose I don't," agreed Isidor. "It's awful how quick you get used to this cell life."

The Chief pulled a bell-rope and his Secretary appeared.

"You rang, Chief?" he asked.

The Chief nodded.

"Mr. Kalbfleisch here," he said, "seems to need a vacation."

"Yes, Chief," said the Secretary, with a glance at Isidor.

"Have you any suggestions?" asked the executive.

"I know just the place," beamed the Secretary. "Whistlehurst1by-the-Sea. Bathing. Boating. Modern comforts——"

"All right," said the Chief. "Just fix Mr. Kalbfleisch up with time tables and everything. Let's see, Isidor—you can leave tonight?"

"Well, yes," agreed Isidor, "but Chief, are you sure——"

"BEST thing in the world for you," interrupted the Chief. "Best thing in the world. Wish I could go with you—but that's what I pay for being an executive. Never have a moment—" and he began fumbling with some papers on his desk.

"This way, Mr. Kalbfleisch," suggested the Secretary, and with a final despairing glance at the Chief, Isidor followed.

Three days later he found himself at Whistlehurst-by-the-Sea—and his fears seemed quite ungrounded. Of course, it was raining, and the roof leaked a little—but what was that compared with the rack? And there was the beautiful ocean where he could bathe—or, at least, there was the ocean, and if the beach out in front of the house seemed a little more than usually filled with rocks and old bottles, he had only to walk two or three miles to where there was quite a good beach. And he had with him his wife and nine children whom he hadn't seen for ten months, so all in all, Isidor began to think that a "vacation" wasn't such a bad thing after all.

The sixth straight day that it rained, however, Isidor began to have slight doubts. The children were beginning to become a little restless—in fact, they were getting just a bit on Isidor's nerves. There was something about 11 people in a small house smelling of mosquito oil that did not add to the general happiness of the group, and Hannah, his wife, didn't really look so very well with all those bites on her face and arms. And there was a certain mosquito who came up to Isidor's room every night just after he had gone to bed—

THE food, too, was not quite what might have been expected. Not that Isidor really minded having ants in his sugar and sand in the soup, but there seemed to be a certain damp staleness about everything, which Hannah explained by saying that the local farmers sent all their best stuff to the city. It was a good explanation—but it made rotten meals. In fact, four of the children were taken sick with some sort of digestive trouble and they, combined with the two who had been bitten by a spider, made quite a little hospital of the top floor.

On the ninth day the sun came out—and Isidor decided to take as many of his family as were still on their feet out for a happy day on the beach. As I have suggested, there were certain disadvantages about bathing right in front of the house, but after a nice long walk along the shore (in the course of which Isidor cut his feet to ribbons) they reached the Whistlehurst beach—and there they found that some 4,198,274 other people and 24,754,982 horse flies had had the same idea. This made an average of 1,049,569 people and 6,188,745½ flies for each Kalbfleisch, so after a tasty lunch and a few cramps they walked back to their cottage to find that Sammy and Fannie had got up out of bed in their absence and fallen over the cliff, breaking up Sammy's whole afternoon.

On the tenth day the Third Assistant Torturer of the local branch was somewhat astonished, upon opening up the torture chamber for the day, to find a man sitting upon the rack.

"Hey," he said. "What's this?"

"It's me," said Isidor, stretching himself out in the usual position. "I'm back from my vacation."

KNOCKED HIM OFF THE ROAD

Unusual Experience of a Traveling Man Saved Him From Disease or Death.

ALWAYS TELLS HIS STORY FOR THE BENEFIT OF OTHER FOLKS WHO FIND THEMSELVES IN THE SAME FIX.

Last Saturday a fine appearing man of middle age stepped into the drug store and engaged the druggist in conversation. He said he was a traveling man, and that he had gone through an experience last winter that might help other people, but that had him scared for a while.

"I suppose irregular hours, uncertain meals and six different sleeping places a week had to some extent weakened me, so that when I caught a heavy cold in the December cold spell I couldn't throw it off. It lasted about eight weeks before it began to alarm me. Then I lost weight so rapidly and had to cough so much I had to quit the road for a while. When I got home the cold seemed easier, but my stomach didn't act right. I hated the sight of food in the morning, and what I ate at noon and night stayed in my stomach like lead. Severe pains, too, made me uneasy all the time. I doctored for the stomach, and they wanted me to have an X-ray examination. I had about concluded to go to the hospital when an old friend of mine brought me a bottle of medicine.

"The first week improved me. The cold yielded first, though I had had it for twelve weeks. I quit coughing. Then I got the second bottle, and it fixed my stomach trouble, so that after taking two bottles I was able to resume my work on the road.

"That medicine was World's Tonic, and whenever I pass the display of World's Tonic in a drug store I just have to stop in and tell the druggist of my experience, in the hope that some other poor sufferer will thereby be encouraged to take this most valuable of all remedies. I think now that I was full of catarrh, and I shudder to think what might have happened to me if I had not known of the great benefits of World's Tonic."

World's Tonic is for sale at Dow's (formerly McCulloch's), also May's, and all other reliable drug stores. (A-43)

THE other day in Chicago I met one of the reputed bad men. It was my first close up of the real gangster with notches on his gun. He was soft voiced and his English was excellent. One could not help but be impressed by the softness of his well manicured hands. Because his record was made known to me in advance, I was conscious of the quick darting looks he gave around the room while talking. Otherwise he might be the chief executive of a successful corporation.

I OFTEN wonder if the true value of friendship is not exaggerated. It seems to me the greatest favors I have received in life were from total strangers or mere acquaintances. The only person who ever went out of his way to show me how to make a profitable investment was a busy man I had known but a short time. The most cheerful and inspiring letters come to me from those I have never met. The most critical letter I ever received came from a friend of many years who has avoided me ever since. All of us like to accept friendship—but so few of us prove it.

"WAS there anybody attractive on the party?" asked Dolly.

"NO, my dear! HONestly, I've never TRAVeled with such a peCUliar bunch of odd souls."

"That's why I simply can't aBIDe the Popples' SOUSE parties, my dear! I mean what's the sense in GOing on them if you're going to be BORED to tears meeting a lot of STUpefying people and all?"

"I KNOW, my dear," retorted Sandie, "but I SIMply aDORE meeting strange people like that because I mean I think it BROADens your underSTANDing of human NAture or something, and ANYways my dear there was this ONE terribly CUTE old BACHelor gent who inTRIGUED me MADly because I mean he was the most galLANT old bozo you've ever SEEN, my dear, and I mean I practicably saw NObody ELSE the entire TIME, my dear, because he kept LEADing me COYly out into the GARden and whatnot and FURtively seizing my HAND and BREATHing sweet SENtiments into my EAR although he was about EIGHTy or something—can you COPE with it?"

"My dear, I can't BEAR it!" screamed Dolly. "I think there's NOTHing more rePELlent."

"WELL, my dear, I aGREE with you absoLUTELY only THIS medieval fossil was SIMply FAScinating my dear because he's ACtually the most well-inFORMED person I've ever MET. I mean I HONestly just HUNG on his WORDS, sort of, as he WANdered vaguely ON about PAINTing and LITrature and whatnot—you know the type!"

"What did he have to say on the subject?" demanded Dolly skeptically.

"Oh, my dear, he was POSitively MARvelous because he just kept disCOURSing wildly about all these WRIters and ARtists, you know, and I was TOO imPRESSED because he said I was NATurally an easTHETICAL TYPE or something only I'd had the WRONG enVIRonment for my intelLECtual HERitage—can you COPE with it?"

"What on earth's THAT, my dear?" inquired Dolly ironically. "Or didn't you bother to ASK him?"

"Well, I mean he said I was REALLY too intelLECTUAL, sort of, to just barge around in soCIETY because he said I had an AWfully good BRAIN and it was a CRIME I wasn't in an arTISTIC and kind of creAtive ATmosphere to deDEVop my aesTHETical side or something, do you know what I mean?"

"I couldn't be SURE, my dear, but it sounds like a lot of HORSE-radish to me!"

"It would, my dear," responded Sandie witheringly, "because you see you just don't underSTAND that side of me that this old BOZO understood right AWAY the minute he enCOUNtered me and began conDUCTING me into the ROSE garden at every opportunity!"

* * *

"AND then I s'pose he PROPOSED, didn't he?"

"Yes, my dear," gurgled Sandie. "It was SIMply SCREAMing only I felt TERrible SORry for the poor old thing because he was SO sinCERE and all, that you simply COULDn't help aDORing him, sort of."

"Well, my dear, why on EARTH didn't you accept him? He can't live LONG!"

"WELL, my dear, I ACtually thought SEriously of it at one puoint, but he hasn't a SOU, I discovered."

"I think he had an awful NERVE to propose to you in that case."

"Oh, my dear, he was TIGHT the entire TIME, practicably."

"Oh, I SEE, my dear," yawned Dolly. "No WONder he pulled that riDIC line about your being aesTHETic or something!"

"My dear, he was PERfectly SOber when we were talking about THAT," insisted Sandie, tartly.

"I GAINED FIVE POUNDS; OWE ALL TO NEW KONJOLA"

Pittsburgh Man Sick Since 1928—Now Free of Stomach Trouble and Nervousness.

Konjola has become the most talked-of medicine in Pittsburgh simply because it makes good; because it wins victory after victory over those stubborn and obstinate cases that have defied and resisted all other medicines and treatments tried.

MR. C. H. DAVIS

Yet it is not surprising that Konjola is such a success, for it is really 32 medicines skillfully blended into one, and of these 32 ingredients, 22 are the juices of roots and herbs of known medicinal value. All who suffer and who would be well again are urged to call on the Konjola Man, who is at the Dow Drug Store (formerly McCulloch's), Penn Avenue and Sixth Street, Pittsburgh, and hear what Konjola has done and is doing. Let the experiences of others be your guide. Take, as a typical example of Konjola at work, the case of Mr. C. H. Davis, 311 Parker Street, Pittsburgh, who said to the Konjola Man a few days ago:

"In my opinion there is no medicine in the world like Konjola. I have a good right to say that for this was the first and only medicine that restored my health after I had suffered since December, 1928.

"Until about four weeks ago my system was so upset and rundown that I steadily lost strength and energy. I was underweight and suffered daily from stomach trouble. Meals ceased to be a pleasure because the food failed to digest. Practically everything I ate fermented quantities of gas that bloated me dreadfully. During the night my sleep was disturbed at all hours by irregular bladder actions. Nervousness was the natural result of these ailments. I was so weak that I could hardly work and to my distress I found that I was getting worse every day.

"As I said before, I suffered until about four weeks ago. At that time I started the Konjola treatment. My friends persuaded me to give it a trial, stating that they knew it would help me; that it was what I should have had in the first place. Well, it turned out to be exactly that. I gained five pounds and owe it all to Konjola. In four weeks' time all my ailments were swept away. My digestion was restored; my kidneys were strengthened and my nerves were calmed and soothed. I have greater strength, energy and vigor. I did not realize that a medicine could work the wonders that Konjola did. I praise it with every breath."

Konjola contains no hazardous ingredients, for it is all pure, wholesome medicine, bringing lasting and abundant relief, not mere temporary betterment.

The Konjola Man is at the Dow Drug Store (formerly McCulloch's), Penn Avenue and Sixth Street, Pittsburgh, where he is meeting the public daily, introducing and explaining the merits of this new and different medicine.

There is also a Konjola Man at Dow's Drug Store, Diamond and Smithfield—also Dow's Drug Store, 5939 Penn Avenue, East Liberty.

Popularity of Small Home Seen in New Building

BRISK DEMAND FOR PROPERLY DESIGNED HOME

Construction in Pittsburgh Steady While South Hills District Shows Gains.

Popularity of small homes of six and seven rooms, equipped with the best of modern features, has been strongly marked in the trend of building activity in Pittsburgh during 1929, according to local builders. There is a steady demand for small houses of good design.

While the movement toward the apartment has emptied many of the old-fashioned homes, the modern house of good proportions has been able to hold its own. Many who have been accustomed to living in their own homes all their lives have moved into an apartment only to tire of it and again seek a place of their own.

The well-planned modern home, constructed of durable materials, is an investment to give lasting satisfaction. It usually includes a garage attached, sunparlor and completely equipped kitchen. Landscaping is also an important part of the charm of the modern house, for, no matter how small the lot, the surroundings should be in keeping with the architecture of the home.

EAST END ACTIVITY

In the East End district, many of the new developments are on the grounds of old mansions. These tracts in choice residential sections represent such values for subdivision purposes that many of the old houses have been torn down, and the ground used for a number of individual homes.

Large real estate developments in the South Hills have attracted many home seekers in that direction. The growth of the South Hills is an unusual story of progress and illustrates in a striking way the benefits of public improvements. There are as yet no indications that the growth in the South Hills has reached its peak.

Mt. Lebanon, the most active of the South Hills communities, is considered the fastest growing municipality in Pennsylvania. Building figures went well over $6,000,000 last year and the work done so far this year surpasses in value that done last year in the same period.

Dormont, Brentwood, Crafton and Brookline districts also report much building. It is believed that the Sawmill Run boulevard, now under construction, will be a big factor in improving transportation to all of the South Hills boroughs.

The North Hills districts have also come in for increasing attention. Big building operations are developing in the West View neighborhood.

CITY'S JULY BUILDING

Building permits issued in Pittsburgh during the month of July were a trifle larger in number, but declined slightly in value from the record of July, 1928.

The Bureau of Building Inspection reports that there were 678 permits issued for work valued at $2,115,322, compared with 662 permits for $2,479,966 in the same month last year and 595 permits for $5,051,277 in June, 1929. The large drop from June is entirely seasonal.

In home building the figures were also slightly below those of the same month last year. There were 142 dwelling permits valued at $903,700, compared with 154 permits for $1,213,733 in July, 1929, and 172 housing permits for $1,295,475 in June, 1929.

The Fifteenth Ward (Hazelwood district) was the leader last month in home construction with 26 permits for work valued at $169,100. The Fourteenth Ward had 15 permits for $155,000 and the Nineteenth Ward had 13 permits totaling $107,500.

Bids Are Received For Aliquippa Job

Jacob Frank is taking bids for a store and apartment building in Aliquippa.

Path for Cows In Chicago Loop Costly Feature

A COW PATH through a centrally located property in the Chicago loop district subtracts $79,125 from the value of the property, according to the estimates of realtors. The property is 90x90 feet at the northwest corner of Clark and Monroe streets and is improved with a 22-story building. An easement, a relic of the days when cattle roamed over Chicago, provides that 10x63 feet be kept open for the ingress and egress of cows.

ALUMINUM CO. EXPANDS PLANT

The Aluminum Company of America is proceeding to erect a machine shop at its New Kensington plant and a large tube mill addition at its plant in Arnold, Pa.

The new machine shop, a building 130x482 feet, supersedes the present smaller shop and will provide modern facilities for repairing equipment such as rolling mills, shears and automatic machinery. The shop is to have a large open working floor serviced by 50-ton cranes, and a mezzanine floor to accommodate light tool equipment. The addition to the company's present tube mill at Arnold will house heat-treating equipment as well as tube-drawing benches and the usual accessory facilities.

Work has been started on the new buildings which will be of brick and steel construction; they are being designed and built by the company's own organization. The company states that all new equipment for the new units has been selected and purchased.

State Realty Meet Committees Named

C. Edward Keck has appointed committees in the Pittsburg Real Estate Board to prepare for the ninth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association, which will be held in Pittsburgh October 16 to 18. Leaders of various committees are John L. Walsh, J. W. Cree, Jr., L. W. Monteverde, Roy R. Cappe, Robert S. Ellis, William Weiss, A. W. Stevenson, C. M. McCormick, C. G. Pfordt, Thomas C. McMahon, R. T. Mackintosh, E. C. Brainerd and J. Meryl Silk.

Convenient Broiler In Model Kitchen

The Virginia Manor model home, sponsored by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, includes in the equipment of the kitchen a stove furnished with an in-a-drawer broiler. This feature eliminates stooping to look in the oven. The housewife will find the drawer constructed waist-high and easily handled. The stove is known as the Universal In-a-Drawer Broiler Range.

Bellevue Business District Expands

Excavation for a commercial garage at 616 Lincoln avenue, Bellevue, has been started by the Jenkins-Hertzig Company. The new building will be 50x112 feet and represents a further extension of the business district into the upper Lincoln avenue residential section.

Glendale Business Property in Deal

The Real Estate Company, of Pittsburgh, sold for Harry I. Miller to Jennie R. Rush a one-story business property in Carothers avenue, Glendale, for $12,000. The building is occupied by the Kroger Grocery and Baking Company.

Smith & Mott Close Deals in Brookline

In Brookline, Smith & Mott sold for Ellen L. Smith to William F. Eberle a five-room bungalow on 40x120 feet at 1517 Merrick avenue, and for Rose McGuire 30x120 feet in Starkamp avenue for $550.

Survey Outlines Changes In Design of Small Home

Present trends in small home construction include a number of outstanding changes, according to a study by the Division of Building and Housing of the Department of Commerce. The results were made public by James A. Taylor, acting chief of the division.

Kitchens are more nearly alike in all houses than any other room. The built-in garage has worked its way down form the more expensive homes into the moderate priced list. The front porch is rapidly going out of style. A sun parlor on the rear of a house has become fairly common, and the rear living room is no longer a curiosity. The majority of living rooms are about two-thirds as wide as they are long. Dining rooms are usually more nearly square, and bedrooms are larger in two-story houses than in one-story dwellings.

"Most people agree that present home design is improving steadily," Mr. Taylor said. "One reason for this is that a designer is now more often able to start with a good setting for the house than formerly. The efforts of the National Association of Real Estate Boards to promote good subdivision layout and city planning, and the general movement for better planning are bearing fine fruit. Zoning and deed restrictions are aiding to maintain the character of residential neighborhoods. This all gives an incentive to better architecture, and designers assume a long life for houses and emphasize durability at many points."

The lowest priced houses now being built in quantity in the larger cities today are of five and six rooms, with one-story construction apparently predominating for the five-room, and two-story for the six-room size, according to the survey. The six-room, two-story house is favored more in eastern cities, whereas in cities of the middle and far west, the five-room bungalow is in the lead in the lowest priced group.

Moreover, the survey held forth some reassurance to those decrying the fact that the home has been surrendered as a place for social life. It evidently hasn't. A fireplace, that traditional nucleus for home sentiment, is being built in by far the majority of homes today, and a sun porch, which furnishes additional room for hospitality, is likewise demanded by the majority of home builders and purchasers. Radios, too, Mr. Taylor declared, are serving to retain the home as the center of the family's social life pattern.

Watching Real Estate

By M. V. BURGESS

THE tide of real estate sales activity has been at low ebb recently. The volume of transfers recorded at the City-County Building has been light and the market is drifting quietly through the vacation season with only an occasional flurry to enliven the picture. Indications of an improving demand for property have been noted, however. A brisk rental demand is reported from a number of the better residential suburbs. Brokers say there are more persons in the market for attractive small homes than at any time since May 1.

ONE broker who has been active in the uptown district of Fifth avenue says that the quiet market which has prevailed in real estate has been the result of the speculation which followed the war period. During the post-war excitement there was considerable trading in apartments and rows of houses. Rents were jacked up to fantastic figures during the manipulations and the tenants swore not to forget about it. They have had their inning since that time. There has been plenty of vacant property to worry the landlord.

A PROPERTY which is priced right is considered half sold. A broker tells of one property on which the price had been reduced nearly 200 per cent from the figure which was asked during the upswing of six years ago. This property sold recently at the reduced price. This was an exception, of course, as the price which had been asked in the first place was entirely out of reason. In pricing property, the rule which some of the best real estate men follow is to ask the seller to name a figure which the seller himself would pay if he were in the market.

MARK LEVY who has appraised many millions of dollars worth of real estate in the Chicago loop, has a definition of "fair market value" which may be applied to any type of property. He says: "Fair market value is the price at which a willing seller and a willing buyer would agree to trade if both were aware of all the facts in the case." There must be a buyer and seller in every deal, each working for his own best interests, but where both are reasonable in their views there is much more possibility of completing a transaction which will bring profit to both.

THE Kerotest Manufacturing Company is building a $100,000 addition to its plant at 2525 Liberty avenue. The company manufactures a variety of valves, fittings and oil well supplies. The Cuthbert Brothers Company has the contract. The building will be a four-story fireproof brick and steel structure and will be finished in two months. The weight of the materials manufactured has made it necessary to design the building to carry one of the heaviest live loads in the city.

GREENTREE district is at last assured of a direct improved road to the downtown district. City Council has authorized the paving of Independence street from Woodville avenue to the city line at a cost of $160,000. Allegheny County has construction well under way on the Washington pike, which is the continuation of Independence street in Greentree Borough. The improvement of this road will open up a big stretch of undeveloped territory located on high ground and nearer to Pittsburgh than the majority of the South Hills suburbs.

THE West End, natural gateway for many of the South Hills communities, is slated for many new improvements. The steamshovels clearing the way for the Saw Mill Run boulevard are now working down the valley toward the West End, where the road will connect with other lanes of travel. Council has ordered legislation for the acquisition of land near West Carson street between Steuben street and South Main street needed for two approaches for the proposed county bridge over the Ohio River from West End to lower North Side.

A NEW home for Shadyside is forecast in the purchase of a lot in Pitcairn place by F. J. Lind. Work will be started in the fall. Mr. Lind, 60x120 feet, from Jesse T. Lazear for $18,000. The deal was made through O. R. Minnemeyer. Pitcairn place is the development on the grounds of the home of the late Robert Pitcairn, high official of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The land is now almost entirely built up with individual homes.

VACANT property is a costly article to hold for speculation. A student of taxes writes to the editor to marvel at the way many put money into vacant lots and hold them for a rise in price which cannot be enough to compensate them for their loss in interest and taxes. The correspondent, who signs himself "Tax Expert," says: "All banks pay at least 4 per cent interest, and taxes on vacant lots are 43 mills, or 4 3-10 per cent, while the average increase in the value of vacant lots is only a fraction over 3 per cent. I think the owners of the more than 100,000 vacant lots in Pittsburgh should wake up and begin to realize that investing their money in idle land, which they do not use and keep everyone else from using, does not pay."

Apartment Figures In North Side Deal

A three-story brick apartment and two-car garage on 60x120 feet at the northwest corner of Wilson avenue and Burgess street, North Side, has been sold for Harry F. Minteer to H. L. Baker for a consideration in the neighborhood of $42,000. The Union Real Estate Company was the broker.

Duquesne Heights Residence Bought

John F. Sweeny sold for Mrs. P. DeBreen to A. G. Faust a six-room frame house and garage on 20x100 feet at 428 Augusta street, Duquesne Heights. The buyer takes the property for a home. The same broker sold for W. A. Bosen to G. E. Gisco an acre and a frame dwelling in Sagwa street, near Riverview Park, North Side, for $2,500.

CHARM FOUND IN OLD HOMES

Most folk surrender readily to the charm of an old building regardless of its character but perhaps just a trifle quicker if it be a home with a story behind it. Some of the old colonial states are rich in homes of this type, homes that are in many instances more than 250 years old. Every one of these has its interesting history.

Virginia, particularly, is well supplied with this type of home. They are scattered along the Potomac River like a string of jewels. They represent not only a phase of American history that is irretrievably past but just as truly an honesty of purpose and workmanship in construction that has become more or less of a memory.

The years have passed with all the ravages of the elements that time alone brings. War has raged about them from the wars with the Indian to that of the states. Some of them bear proudly displayed marks of tomahawk as well as cannon ball. But through it all they have stood, are standing yet, and giving shelter and service with satisfaction.

With but few exceptions these are brick houses, built of brick made in their immediate vicinity. They were honestly built with a view to permanence, not for a few years, a decade, or until the architectural fashions might change. A good design, sensible as it was viewed in its day, was selected, and good workmanship was insisted upon.

Rise in Brick Prices Thought Likely Here

A rise in the price of brick here is predicted by those in touch with the local situation. The cost of production is said to have risen steadily, in spite of numerous economies made possible by modern machinery. Increased taxes, transportation costs and wages are said to be responsible.

Thornburg Homes Reported in Deals

In Thornburg, Joseph Breskin sold for W. J. Fitzpatrick to M. H. Leech a brick house on 100x120 feet at 1142 Dartmouth road. Mr. Leech gave in part payment a two-story brick business building in Franklin street, North Side. The same broker sold for W. J. Fitzpatrick to Mrs. A. J. King a home on 60x160 feet in Thornburg.

BUYING HOUSE DECLARED BEST AID TO THRIFT

National Realtor Secretary Points Out New Methods To Acquire Residence.

Many practical considerations make home ownership advisable for the average family of small means, according to Herbert U. Nelson, executive secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. He points out that persons should own their own homes because it makes them save money that they would never accumulate otherwise.

Mr. Nelson calls attention to the fact that modern financing plans make it possible for many persons of small income to be their own landlords. He says:

"There are two good reasons, devoid of any glamor, why home ownership is a good thing for small salaried folks. The first is, that in acquiring a home, such people are forced to save funds that would not be saved in any other way. In other words, through and by means of their home, these people build up a capital and credit standing that nothing but the goal of home ownership could bring about. Nothing but the thought of eventually owning the home they have so fondly selected would make such people continue denials and economies necessary to achieve this end; for once started to save for a home, the average family will make every sacrifice to keep up the payments. Nothing short of actual disaster will cause them to give up.

OWNER HANGS ON

"If hard times fall on the renter he can pack up the children and move to cheaper quarters. He often does this rather than change his other living standards. But unless the family working to save for a home is practically wiped out financially, the payments go on. That family will cut down in some other way. They will not loose their home.

"And on the capital built up in homes, thousands of families have borrowed money to make additional investments and to go into business that has brought them prosperity—and often great wealth.

"The second practical reason why home ownership is advisable for the family of small income is, that with very little additional expenditure per month, the average family can have a much better home by owning than by renting. In the beginning, the home a family purchases may not be better than the home they might have rented, but the owned domicile constantly inspires its occupants to improve it. Put a woman into a structure that pleases her and in which she knows she is to reside forevermore, and she will find a thousand ways to make it more convenient and attractive.

VARIETIES OF BUYERS

"In attaining home ownership, many families require some financial assistance; and home buyers and builders who borrow funds with which to accomplish their purpose may be divided into three groups as follows:

Those who can supply in cash 50 per cent or more of the price of the home and who can secure the balance on first mortgage from several different sources.

Those whose cash resources are within the approximate limits of from 25 to 40 per cent of the price of the home and who borrow the amount needed either on first mortgage or through the use of a first and second mortgage.

The third group includes the large number of people who have but 10 to 15 per cent of the price of the home, who sometimes finance through mortgage agencies, but more frequently now by means of an installment purchase agreement or land contract.

REALTOR

LAUDS HOME—Herbert U. Nelson, executive secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, declares that home ownership is one of the greatest incentives to thrift.

CHIMNEY CAPS IMPROVE FLUES

The chimney has always afforded free rein for the imagination of chimney masons and architects. Earliest reproductions of medieval structures have featured the ornamental chimney, as do most sketches of present day homes.

Much of the ornamental effect may be gained by the handling of the masonry units of which the chimney is built. The crowning motive often essential for the complete success of this feature is the chimney cap. This may be made of clay or terra cotta; sometimes it is cast from cement. The cap must be thoroughly cemented into the top of the masonry chimney, its diameter must be sufficient to prevent reducing the flue area below that of the chimney flue and it must extend up above all the surrounding roofs.

The primary fnuction of the chimney cap is to improve tne draft in the flue for the heating boiler or fireplace. This requirement determines its shape and height.

Pittsburghers Going to White Mountains for Polo Games

Debutantes Prepare for Busy Season

By PATRICIA PITT.

"REST and outdoor recreation" may sound a great deal like the attractions described in a summer resort prospectus, but this combination appears to be the chief aim of most of our vacationists. They swim and they play golf, they go yachting and they play tennis—and they're storing up a lot of energy that will be badly needed when the rush of parties begins in the fall.

As the summer progresses and we see how rapidly the list of social affairs for next season is increasing, it becomes more and more evident that the debutantes, at least, are going to have a busy winter. Their mothers won't be exactly idle, either, since all the details of entertaining fall, naturally, on their shoulders.

Polo is always of absorbing interest, and I hear that the annual games will be played at Dixville Notch, in the White Mountains, from today until August 15. Quite a few Pittsburghers are planning to go up to the mountains for the polo. And the annual White Mountains tennis championship games were played during the last week at Crawford Notch.

It's not hard to understand, though, that for us here in the city, interest centers largely around events a little more in the future. As it did last year, the eason really opens in September, so we haven't so very long to wait until the entertaining begins.

Party List Grows

DATES taken for the coming season are beginning to form a rather complicated pattern. Every day or so another party is added to that already unwieldy list of social affairs. One we heard about last week was the coming-out tea for Mary Blair Holmes, which will be given November 9 in the home of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Holmes, in Devonshire street. Mary, by the way, is in Europe just now, but she will be back in time to enter her sophomore year at Bryn Mawr. Mr. and Mrs. Holmes are at Fisher's Island, New York, and expect to remain there until after Labor Day.

Another party is the dinner dance which Mr. and Mrs. J. Francis Burke, of Pembroke place, will give on the day after Christmas for their debutante daughter, Ruth. The dinner will be given in the Pittsburgh Golf Club, and, of course, precedes the ball

ONE of next winter's attractive debutantes is Miss Mary Elizabeth Floyd, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Atterbury McGinley of North Lincoln avenue and Sewickley Heights. Mrs. McGinley will introduce her daughter at a tea to be given November 19 in her Sewickley Heights home and on December 27, Mr. and Mrs. McGinley will give a ball in the Pittsburgh Club. Saratoga Springs Attracts Society

'400' Is Indulging In 'Sport of Kings'

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER, Universal Service Society Editor.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., Aug. 3.

THE "sport of kings" also is the sport of the "400!" But far more society members than the merely mythical "400" were on hand for the opening of the season at the Saratoga race track. Many are remaining here just for the week, while several hundred others intend to stay and follow the dashing colors of the horses during the entire racing season.

Many of those here have horses entered in the contests and, of course, have backing aplenty with them. And we'll let you in, too, on some of the purses that have already gone into the pocketbooks of some of our leading ladies.

It was a grand sight at the opening of the racing season this week. On the lawn and in the clubhouse were scores of ladies prominent in the social ranks and a stunning appearance they made in colorful costumes. They far outrivaled the costumes seen at Longchamps or other European sporting places.

Stunning Costumes

Just to mention a few, there was Mrs. William A. Vanderbilt in a flesh-colored chiffon coat suit, Mrs. R. T. Wilson in green-figured silk, Miss Elizabeth Artemus in a stunning new sunback sleeveless gown of white satin and red hat, Mrs. Payne Whitney and Mrs. Henry C. Phipps in tasteful white costumes, Mrs. Charles Minet Avey in rose and white figured silk, Mrs. George Mesta in belge figured silk, Mrs. Sydney J. Smith in rose and white figured silk, Mrs. George Sloane, in brilliant blue and oh, so many others.

And now about the winnings of those of the smarter set. Mrs. Henry C. Phipps, with her dashing Divaolo,

BESIDE a stone bench in the garden of her home, which is in Flaccus road, Ben Avon, is Miss Florence L. Reich, a daughter of Mrs. P. J. Reich. New Era Club to Honor Members of 25 Years' Standing

Reception and Tea Will Be Given at Opening Meeting

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG.

THE New Era Club has chosen a somewhat unusual way of opening its fortieth season. On Wednesday, September 25, a reception and tea will be given at the Congress of Clubs in honor of those who have been members of the club for 25 years. In this group are numbered Miss Grace Van Wert Henderson, who was the club's fifth president; Mrs. Robert D. Coard, Mrs. Mattie Patterson and Mrs. Joseph C. DeNoon, all of whom have sat in the president's chair; Miss Suzanne Beatty, Mrs. Lenore Butterfield, Miss Romaine Clarke, Mrs. Charles Fairman, Mrs. William S. Fulton, Mrs. Alma Garbish, Mrs. Richard Morrison, Miss Margaret McCausland, Mrs. William J. McMarlin, Mrs. Louise Sprague, Mrs. W. H. McKenna and Mrs. Clarence Brenneman.

The past presidents of the club will serve as hostesses that day, and the program will include music by Mrs. Bertha Gross King, Mrs. Florence McQuiston and Mrs. Charles E. Paschedag, readings by Mrs. Norval R. Daugherty and the presentation of the year book by the program chairman, Mrs. Jo Vogel.

The year's plans, as prepared by Mrs. Vogel, present a pleasing prospect for the season. After the opening reception will come an afternoon over the teacups at the New Future Home with Mrs. Joseph C. DeNoon, president of the New Future Association, and her co-workers of the board. Then on October 23 reports of the State Federation convention will be heard, the program also including music by Mrs. Mary Hahn and readings by Miss Elizabeth O'Neil.

Benefit Bridge

November 7 is the date set for the philanthropic department's annual bridge benefit for which Mrs. A. G. H. Frazier will be chairman and Mrs. Charles B. McFail, assistant chairman. This will, of course, be at the Congress of Clubs where the New Era holds all its regular meetings.

Reciprocity day (with the Health Colony Club this year) will be marked by a travel talk by Dr. J. A. Alexander, readings by Mrs. E. D. Harshbarger and solos by Mrs. Ray S. Judd.

November 27 will take the women to Carnegie Institute for a view of the international art exhibit preceded by luncheon in the institute cafeteria. The usual all-day sewing for the Dorothy Miller Christmas committee will be held December 11 in the home of Mrs. Charles S. Miller, Heberton avenue, and as a program feature there will be a Christmas talk by Mrs. Dulcie Fiske Fairman. The only other December gathering will be a dessert bridge on the twenty-seventh at the home of Mrs. Mae P. Rinehart, Beechwood boulevard.

Ushering in the new year will be a meeting on the eighth at which Raymond M. Marlier, past president of the Pittsburgh Aero Club, will speak and Mrs. Grace L. Wise will sing. Mrs. Vogel will be chairman for the second January meeting, that on the twenty-second, which will be addressed by Miss Helen Grimes, speaking on her experiences in the State Legislature. Miss Alberta Wunderly will sing.

Lincoln Program

A "duologue" by Mrs. J. Charles Wilson and Mrs. Dulce Fiske Fairman promises something out of the ordinary for "Lincoln Day," February 12, an occasion to which grace will be added by the 1860 dresses to be worn by the members. Miss Helen Irwin will have charge of a drama day February 26; then next will be the spring musicale (March 12), under the direction of Mrs. Marjorie Keil Benton. The affair will be in the home of Mrs. P. W. Siebert and presidents of other clubs will be honor guests.

A spring fashion show, with a musical program under the direction of Lyman Almy Perkins, will be an event of March 26; April will bring the annual meeting of a literary day, with Mrs. Marie Tello Phillips, chairman of the Congress department of literature, as speaker, and music by Mrs. Thomas J. Carroll and Thomas J. Carroll, Jr., at the latter. The year will close with the annual luncheon and reception at the Pittsburgh Country Club on May 14, the annual forestry day on May 21 and a social meeting May 28 at the home of Mrs. Louis Sperber, Rebecca avenue, Wilkinsburg.

The club's staff of officers for next season is: President, Mrs. John Howard Phillips; Mrs. A. J. Kelly, Jr., and Mrs. Vogel, vice presidents; Mrs. L. W. Sperber, recording, and Mrs. V. A. Sandles, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. G. H. Frazier, press secretary, and Mrs. Mae P. Rinehart, treasurer. Mrs. John R. Johnston, Mrs. William S. Fulton, Mrs. Charles Fairman and Mrs. Eliza Moore ar honorary vice presidents, and the directors include Mrs. Andrew Mercer, Mrs. James C. Mackrell, Mrs. F. B. Killen, Mrs. W. C. Bright, Mrs. Thomas Fleeson, Mrs. James E. Bay, Mrs. John J. Callahan, Mrs. P. W. Siebert and Mrs. Mary Murphy.

TRAVELING

MISS MARY GERTRUDE YOHE, daughter of Mrs. Sara Keil Yohe, of the King Edward Apartments, is visiting Miss Nancy Brimmer, of Cheyenne, Wyo. Later, Miss Yohe will go on to Los Angeles to be the guest of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Keil.

Plan Party For Woman's Club Head

A RECEPTION to the new president, Mrs. Sigmund S. Stingel, on Tuesday, October 1, in the Congress of Clubs, will begin the new season for the Woman's Club of the City of Pittsburgh. Among the speakers for next year will be Judge A. D. Brandon, who will tell the women something of Morals Court and its problems, and Dr. S. H. Williams, of the University of Pittsburgh, who will give an illustrated lecture. Committee chairmen appointed for the year include: Mrs. A. D. Hunter, social; Mrs. Frances Schreiner Weber, music; Mrs. J. F. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. George Weber, blind; Mrs. R. W. Johnston, legislative; Mrs. John Rehling, welfare; Mrs. Ada McWhinney, forestry; Mrs. E. W. Bartberger, drama; Mrs. T. A. Johnston, current events; Mrs. C. B. Miller, extension; Mrs. William Kauffeld, altruistic; Mrs. David I. McCahill, hospitality. Mrs. Eliza J. Moore and Mrs. Fannie Crawford Greene are again custodians of the flag, Mrs. J. C. Wanner and Mrs. Harry Wilson, registrars, and Mrs. Harry Eakin is historian.

Lees Engagement Announced at Tea

MRS. JAMES LEES and her daughters, Miss Dorothy Blanche and Miss Virginia Maple Lees, of California avenue, Oakmont, entertained with a bridge tea in the Valley Heights Country Club yesterday afternoon to announce the engagement of Miss Dorothy Lees to Alfred Cuthbert Martin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Martin, also of Oakmont. Miss Lees attended Lake Erie College and her fiance is a graduate of Syracuse University and a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity. Twelve tables were in play during the afternoon, and last night Mr. and Mrs. Lees entertained with a buffet supper in their home for about 30 guests.

Eisfelders Give Anniversary Party

MR. AND MRS. ARTHUR M. EISFELDER, of Hobart street, entertained at dinner Tuesday night in honor of their twentieth wedding anniversary. There were 40 guests, and the decorations were roses and tulips. Bridge and mah jong followed dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Eisfelder will leave tonight for Chicago, where they will give a dinner in the Drake Hotel for 24 guests in honor of their anniversary. They will return to Pittsburgh late in September.

Luncheon Planned By Purdue Club

THE Purdue Woman's Club will have a bridge luncheon at Kaufmann's on Wednesday. Mrs. F. W. Macy is hostess and is being assisted by Mrs. Harry A. Estep and Mrs. L. E. Endsley.

Proper Use of Business And Informatory Double In Bridge Explained

By ERNEST H. HEINRICHS,
Sun-Telegraph Bridge Expert.

A CORRESPONDENT writing to this column from Titusville, Pa., says: "As a regular reader of your interesting articles on bridge I should like to ask you what is the proper use of the 'Informatory' double and the 'Business' double."
—B. L. H.

The limitations of this department make it impossible to answer this question fully. For a thorough understanding, a player should have a competent instructor and a text book. However, the following elementary facts will no doubt help you to some extent.

When doubles were introduced into the game of auction bridge, considerable interest was added to the game and the battle of wits and strategy became much livelier and far more fascinating.

Introduced in 1911

Of the two doubles, the "Business" double antedates the "Informatory" by a number of years; the latter being first introduced in 1911 and again in another form in 1914.

In practice, the application of the "Business" double is somewhat simpler than its younger type. In a general way, the "Business" double means just what it implies, i. e., "business." In other words, the doubler believes he can defeat, or set, the contract which the declarer has announced he can make. All higher authorities agree that the application of a "Business" double is not advisable in lower bids. A no-trump bid of three or more, a major suit of three or more and a minor suit bid of five or more may be advantageously doubled for "business." The reason for this is obvious. For example, if you double a bid of four diamonds or four clubs, and your double should fail, the declarer would score game on the doubled contract, which would not have been the case if you had kept him from making more than his bid undoubled. Hence a "Business" double is usually predicated upon the fact that you are practically certain of defeating the contract, and that it is applied against a bid which is high enough to make its success easier of accomplishment.

Different Purpose

The "Informatory" double has an entirely different purpose. Its primary object is to change the bid of opponents into a call for your side. That is to say, the "Informatory" doubler tries to take the bid away from the original bidder and change it into a bid for his side. In most instances the "Informatory" double is made by the player on the left of the original bidder, after the latter has opened the auction with a bid at no trump or at a suit bid.

Assuming the original bidder opens with a declaration of one no trump and the player on his left doubles, it is an "Informatory" double, and its announcement conveys to the doubler's partner the information: My hand is strong enough to assist you in any suit bid you make, but be sure to make your choice the best one you can. If in a case of this kind, the third player passes, it is mandatory upon the doubler's partner to make a bid no matter how weak his own hand may be, because the responsibility for the double does not rest with him, but with the doubler. If, however, the intervening player, the partner of the original bidder, raises or changes the bid of declarer, the doubler's partner may pass or make an originual bid of his own.

Similar Procedure

A similar procedure takes place in case the original bidder makes a bid in spades, hearts, diamonds or clubs. In such a situation the "Informatory" double by the player on dealer's left tells his partner: I do not wish to play the hand at that call; make any other bid your hand warrants and I can assist you. Here again the doubler's partner must bid, in case third hand passes, except for one exceptional reason. It may happen that the player has made the "Informatory" double against a suit bid, in which suit his partner finds himself strong enough to defeat the original bid. In that case, he may pass, and the pass is called a "Business" pass. Explaining the practice of the "Informatory" double further, it must be remembered that the partner of the player making an "Informatory" double has not already bid. For instance: South bids one diamond, West passes, North passes, East bids one heart, South two diamonds, West doubles. This double of West is a "Business" double, because it was made after—and not before—his partner had already made a bid of his own.

A very important factor to be remembered in connection with the practice of doubling is this: Both doubles, the "Informatory" as well as the "Business" double, must be based upon a certain amount of strength in the doubler's hand. A "Business" double predicates strength to defeat the bid made, and an "Informatory" double announces strength for another, probably a game-going contract.

VISITING IN SOUTH

MISS DOROTHY HEDGES, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hedges, of Beechwood avenue, Carnegie, and St. Petersburg, Fla., has been visiting Miss Helen Ruth Gaines, of Burlington, Ky. Miss Hedges will enter Sweet Briar College in the Fall.

Members of Music Club Traveling

TUESDAY MUSICAL CLUB members are in a continuous state of travel these days. Mrs. David Aiken Pitcairn, who is at her summer home in McCracken's Landing, Ontario, has entertained a number of her club friends there. At the close of the annual convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs, several T. M. members motored from Boston to McCracken's Landing to be members of a house party. They included Mrs. T. C. Donovan, Mrs. W. C. Dierks and Mrs. Martha Myers Murdock, and at the same time Mrs. Thomas K. Cree, Mrs. Alvan W. Sherrill and Mrs. Jessie Yuille Yon were also Mrs. Pitcairn's guests. Since then Mrs. Sherrill and her husband, Dr. Sherrill, have gone on to the Iron City Fishing Club, and the others in the party have returned home. Mr. and Mrs. Cree are leaving on August 17 for Kineo, Me., and Mrs. Donovan will leave town about the same time for Providence, where she will be a guest of Mrs. George Hale, a National Federation officer. Mrs. Donovan is the new national treasurer. Mrs. Henry H. Hanna and Mrs. Joseph Gray, also Tuesday Musical members, are home from a visit with Mrs. C. H. Aufhammer at her summer home in Thorndale, and Mrs. Edward E. Hunt and her daughter, Mrs. Charles E. Barnhart, other members, who recently returned from Atlantic City, will leave shortly for Bar Harbor. Mrs. F. W. Edmonson, a director, is at her summer home in Brookville.

Mrs. J. S. Christy Entertains Guest

MRS. J. SMITH CHRISTY, music chairmaan of the Bellevue Woman's Literary Club, had as her house guest last week Mrs. George Forsyth, of Hamilton, Ont. Mrs. Forsyth accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Christy on a western motor trip that took them to Pikes Peak, the Grand Canyon, Yosemite and Yellowstone National parks and California.

There are many advantages in buying your FUR COAT during August at Grabowsky's

—— although there will be no typical August Sale with its customary discounts

It is the firm conviction of this establishment, gained after an experience of fifty-four years, that August Sales with definite discounts, today are misleading and unsound economically. This opinion is substantiated by an analysis of the trapping, manufacturing and merchandising conditions of this day and age. The opinion, moreover, is concurred in by the foremost fur merchants throughout America.

So, Grabowsky's hold out no promises of discounts, whether 25%, 33% or 50%, during August.

However—

The new fur fashions for 1929-1930 are now assembled. Pelts were selected months ago when the very cream of the catch was available. It is quite obvious that an equal selection cannot be had again this year. Models have been brought from abroad . . . reproduced and adapted . . . original designs created . . . developed with the customary skill of Grabowsky furriers . . . and a magnificent collection of authentic new models awaits you.

MANUFACTURING FURRIERS SINCE 1875

The fur coats at the present prices, represent the highest value obtainable. To purchase a fur coat, any place, without first shopping in this store, is unthinkable.

Debutantes Prepare for Busy Season

which Mr. and Mrs. William Christopher Robinson will give in the Pittsburgh Club for their debutante daughter, Mary Franklin Robinson.

I believe I told you before, too, about the ball which Mr. and Mrs. George H. Clapp will give on December 19 in the Pittsburgh Club for their debutante granddaughter, Katharine Collin, daughter of the junior William Welch Collins, of Sewickley.

Earlier in the season, too, there will be the dinner-dance which Mr. and Mrs. Christian Ihmsen Shannon, of Sewickley, will give in the Allegheny Country Club. They will entertain for Mary Franklin Robinson, debutante daughter of the William Christopher Robinsons, of Ridge avenue, North Side, and Sewickley Heigths, on September 17.

Mary, who will make her bow in December, is spending the summer with her parents at their cottage, "East Dunes," in Watch Hill.

To Wed in East

A FORMER Sewickley woman is planning an early September wedding. She is Mrs. Eleanor Semple Messler, daughter of the John B. Semples, and her marriage to Samuel A. Gayley, of Philadelphia, is set for September 6 in New York. You may remember that Mrs. Messler's first husband was Thomas D. Messler.

Plan Horse Show

THE Pittsburgh Hunt is planning its horse show for September, the date being Saturday, the fourteenth. The show will be held, as usual, at the ring at the Hunt clubhouse on Hunt road in the Fox Chapel district, and the general chairman this year is David I. McCahill. George Paull, you know, is master of hounds.

Married in Church

A RECENT wedding here was that of Mrs. Martha Montgomery Jenkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Montgomery, of the Hotel Schenley, and William T. McCullough, Jr., son of the William T. McCulloughs, of Bennington avenue. The ceremony was performed July 27 at 6:30 o'clock in Calvary Episcopal Church by the Rev. Dr. Thaddeus Cheatham, of Pinehurst, N. C. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore an afternoon frock of cream lace with a small hat and carried white orchids and roses.

Elizabeth McCullough, sister of Mr. McCullough, was maid of honor, appearing in pastel chiffon with a large garden hat, and carrying pink roses and blue delphinium. Hax McCullough was his brother's best man.

A dinner in the French room of the Schenley supplemented the ceremony, and afterwards Mr. and Mrs. McCullough left for an extensive trip. They will make their home in Pittsburgh.

Mary Frick to Wed

AN interesting out-of-town wedding for late September was one of the bits of news during the last week. It is that of Mary Norris Frick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Arthur Frick, of Allentown, and Hollis Stratton French, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French, of Boston, which is set for Saturday, September 28, in the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem. In this same church, by the way, occurred the weddings of the bride's parents and her grandparents and also that of the bridegroom's parents.

Dorothy S. Dodson, of Bethlehem, will be the maid of honor and the bridesmaids are to include Rue French, sister of the bridegroom; Charlotte Farquhar, of York; Mrs. Robert Engle, of New York; Mary Dixon Palmer, of Stroudsburg; Elizabeth Ballard, of Morristown, N. J., and Elizabeth Lee McClenahan, of Philadelphia. The flower girls will be Ruth S. Frick, sister of the bride, and Susan Brooks, of Boston, Mr. French's niece. After the ceremony, there will be a reception at the Frick estate, "Salisbury House."

The prospective bride is a graduate of the National Park Seminary, Washington, D. C., and is a member of the Junior League. Her mother is president of the State Federation of Pennsylvania Women. Mr. French is a Harvard man and he holds degrees from Oxford University and the University of Dijon, France.

AS the summer wanes, the season at the various resorts attracting society folks heightens. Saratoga Springs is now having a brilliant summer season. The junior Thomas Hitchcocks are now there as the guests of the senior Hitchcocks. Mrs. Hitchcock, you know, is the former Margaret Mellon Laughlin. And Mrs. W. Harry Brown, who returned from Europe recently, is now at Saratoga Springs, where she has taken a suite at the United States Hotel. Mrs. George Mesta, formerly of Pittsburgh, now of Washington, is at Saratoga Springs for August, too.

J. Judson Brooks, II, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Faber Brooks, of Sewickley, is entertaining at a house party this week end at the family summer home at Ahmic Lake, Canada. Four Sewickley girls left Friday to be guests, and all of them will make their bows to the social world this fall, except Margaret Holdship, daughter of the Charles Frederick Holdships, who came out last year. And the three buds are Katharine Collin, daughter of the junior William W. Collins; Peggy Milligan, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Milligan, and Dorothy Jarvis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Jarvis.

To See Races

LOUISE EVANS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Oliver Evans, of South Negley avenue, has been at Seabright, have you heard? Later she'll spend some time in New London, Conn., with friends, and will attend the Larchmont boat races.

Some folks are coming back. The James Neales, of Pembroke place, for example, are home from Europe. Miss Margaret Adair and Watson B. Adair, of Sewickley, have just gone to Europe for the remainder of the summer.

Did you know that the Albert Currys, of Woodland road, are in Alberta? They are at Jasper Park Lodge, Jasper Park, with their daughter Dorothy, and son Albert Curry, Jr.

Margaret McCready, daughter of the Robert T. M. McCreadys, of Meadow Garden, Edgeworth, is in Beaumaris, Canada, where she's the guest of another popular Pittsburgh society girl, Juliet Hillman, daughter of the J. Hartwell Hillmans, of Fifth avenue.

Returns Home

AFTER spending several weeks in Nantucket, R. I., as the guest of Elizabeth Bell, of Devonshire street, Lucy Ward, daughter of the T. Coleman Wards, is back home again, and Mrs. Thomas Howe Childs, of Fifth avenue, and her daughter, Anna Knevals Childs, are just back from New York.

Augmenting the ever-growing colony of Pittsburgh folks at Bay Head, N. J., are Mrs. Oliver P. Scaife, Jr., and her son, Oliver P. Scaife III, who'll be there for August.

Go to Ranch

THE lure of the ranch has attracted the John G. Frazers and their daughter, Katherine, to Wyoming.

Spending the summer at Beaumaris, Canada, as usual are the J. Albert McKays, of Amberson avenue.

And did you know that Mrs. Theodore W. Friend, of Wilkins avenue, is in East Hebron, N. H., visiting her sister, Mrs. Lewis Leiper. Later she'll go to Moon Lake, N. Y.

At Moon Lake now is Mrs. William Howard Parke, of Solway street.

Priscilla Barnes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Webber Barnes, of Howe street, is now in Manchester, Mass., where she's the guest of Mrs. Frederick Serring Rhodes.

Patricia Pitt

Reunion Is Held By Lynch Family

DESCENDANTS of Joseph and Marcia Sparks Lynch held a reunion July 27 at the James Dickey farm near Monongahela, with one of their sons, Nelson Andrew Lynch, as the guest of honor. The other sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lynch included Benjamin Sparks Lynch, Lewis Lynch, Charity Lynch Dowden, Nancy Lynch Baker, Eliza Lynch Baker and Rachael Lynch Shepard. Mr. and Mrs. Lynch were among the pioneer settlers of Lynch's Hollow, Elizabeth Township, and a part of the mud and log cabin which Mr. Lynch built more than 100 years ago, is still standing.

Syria Social Club To Hold Boat Ride

THE Syria Ladies' Social Club will hold a boat ride tomorrow evening on the steamer Washington. At 8:30 o'clock the boat will leave the Market street wharf. In charge of the event is Mrs. Arthur C. Myers.

Amaranth Court Party Wednesday

MRS. JANE DANSKIN is chairman for the bingo party which William S. Roe Court, Order of the Amaranth, will hold on Wednesday evening at 610 Arch street.

Weddings and Engagements

YESTERDAY AFTERNOON at 4:30 o'clock in the Waverly Presbyterian Church, the marriage of Miss Dorothy Diamond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Diamond, of Ross avenue, Wilkinsburg, and E. Russell Roller, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Roller, of Alliance, O., was solemnized by the Rev. Dr. Charles Chalfant, of the Western Theological Seminary. The bride wore a frock of orchid chiffon with a hat of French felt to match, while her only attendant, Miss Ellen Eyman, of Cleveland, appeared in honeydew chiffon with a felt hat to correspond. They carried bouquets of garden flowers. Robert Siemon, of Wilkinsburg, was best man and the ushers included Harold Akin, of Alliance; Dwight Beede, of Youngstown, O., and Walter Diamond, brother of the bride. A buffet supper followed the ceremony in the Diamond home, with garden flowers used in the decorations. Mr. and Mrs. Roller will take an eastern motor trip and after September 1 will be at home in Alliance.

Mrs. Donnell N. Oliver

MR. AND MRS. DONNELL NEEL OLIVER, whose marriage was solemnized recently, have returned from their wedding trip through Northern Ontario and Quebec and a stay in the Adirondack Mountains, and are at home in the Cathedral Mansions. Before her marriage, Mrs. Oliver was Miss Mildred Gordon Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Heston Porter, of Sewickley.

THE marriage of Miss Elizabeth Whitmarsh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Whitmarsh, of Princeton place, Swissvale, and Ernest S. Craighead, of Edgewood, was solemnized July 23.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of the marriage of Miss Lottie Reich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Reich, of Phillips avenue, and S. W. Berkowitz, which was solemnized June 30.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of the engagement of Miss Annabelle Elizabeth Burdick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Henry Burdick, of Heberton avenue, to Alfred McKinley Terhune, son of Mrs. Frank Terhune, of Newark, N. J. Miss Burdick is a graduate of the University of Michigan and Columbia University, and is a member of the Beta Tau Alpha fraternity. Mr. Terhune was graduated from Harvard and is a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. A late summer wedding is planned.

Mrs. E. Russell Roller

THE engagement of Miss Gertrude Silverman to Mose Edwin Bolarsky has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sol Silverman, of Bartlett street.

WEDNESDAY night in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Royce Covell, in South avenue, Wilkinsburg, the marriage of their daughter, Miss Louise Covell, and Walter Dietrich Hemker, of Fond-du-lac, Wis., son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hemker, of Great Bend, Ind., was solemnized by the Rev. Dr. Sheridan Watson Bell, of Morgantown, W. Va. The bride wore ivory satin and lace with a tulle veil held with a cap of lace, and she carried a shower of white roses, sweetheart roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Maybelle Covell, of Richmond, Va., was her cousin's maid of honor, appearing in peach chiffon and carrying garden flowers. Arthur Hemker, of Schenectady, N. Y., was his best man and the ushers included Earl Ward, of Akron, O., and Harry Brunner, of Wilkinsburg. A small reception followed the ceremony and later Mr. and Mrs. Hemker left for an eastern trip. They will be at home in Fond-du-lac after September 1.

Choate, of Smethport, Pa., which was solemnized Monday. Mr. and Mrs. Choate will live in Anderson, Ind.

93d Anniversary Sale and Closing Out of Women's Apparel Departments

THE August Sale this year has a double appeal—it marks our 93d Anniversary and the passing of our Women's Apparel Departments which are to be closed out to make room for the increasing needs of the Men's store. Stocks are in excellent condition, and it is perhaps unnecessary to add that this store never handles so-called "sale" goods. Only our own regular stocks will be offered.

Women's Summer Felts and Straw Hats, regularly priced $12 to $25, now $5 to $7.50.
New Fall Millinery, 25% off.
Women's Suits and Ensembles, Spring and Summer models, 1/3 and 1/2 off.
Women's Sport and Fur-trimmed Coats, 1/3 and 1/2 off.
Women's new Fall Coats and Dresses, 1/4 off.
Women's Rain Coats, regularly priced $12 to $25, now $5 to $7.50.
Women's all-silk Sport Scarfs—triangles and squares, 1/2 off.

Women's Wool and Lisle Sweaters, regularly priced $5 to $14, now $3.95.
A few fine $8 to $12 Umbrellas, $4.95.

Men's Straw Hats—Split Braids and Sennits, 1/2 off.
Panamas and Leghorns, 1/3 off.
Men's Coats and Suits, right styles and patterns for Fall and Winter, 20% to 25% off regular prices.
Men's Shirts, Ties, Pajamas, Sports Apparel, Underwear, etc., all reduced to new low prices for this great sale.

Mellon Leaves His Apartment to Live At Carlton Hotel

By GEORGINA WASHINGTON.
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.

BIG doings, these days.

The White House is busy, the cabinet is busy, the old long-windowed drawing rooms are busy. Washington, indeed, seems to be waking up in the middle of the summer night, so to speak, and exerting itself to a little consciousness for a change.

To begin with, the President and Mrs. Hoover stepped forward Tuesday evening with a small dinner in honor of the new Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, having at the same time Mr. and Mrs. Everett Sanders and Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Long. It was rather a home-coming for the First Lady of the Land, for she returned only Monday from a short motor trip in nearby Maryland while the President was on his week-end outing in Virginia.

Mellon Moving

Meanwhile, Mr. Mellon is busy moving.

Almost ever since he has been living in Washington, the Secretary of the Treasury has resided in the spacious domain of perhaps the most fashionable apartment in the national capital—that at Eighteenth street and Massachusetts avenue—but just now the long service seems to be wearing a little both on the Secretary and the suite.

He is, therefore, vacating the premises this summer in favor of the Carlton Hotel, while an army of decorators takes possession and "redoes" it.

As for the genial Secretary of Commerce—Robert P. Lamont—it begins to appear that his only vacation will be Sunday mornings with the funny sheet. What with a coming census check-up on the exact size of Uncle Sam's family, the innumerable new industrial conference committees which he has organized throughout the various business enterprises of the country, and the regular routine of the commerce portfolio, there seems to be little prospect of his getting away, even for a week-end.

Leave City Again

The Assistant Postmaster General and Mrs. W. Irving Glover, who have been on the West Coast for several weeks, returned Wednesday to reinforce the ranks of the "Little Cabinet" set, but their stay was short. Mrs. Glover left yesterday with their children for Eaglesmere, where they will spend the remainder of the summer.

And as for the residential set, they seem to completely forget that this is August, when all sensible people should sit under electric fans and complain of the heat.

Most of the downtown houses, to be sure, are closed, but in Georgetown, Chevy Chase and the nearby summer estates life is just one long party. Edgemoor, particularly, has had a steady round of bridge teas for the last two weeks, patronized largely by the wives of the Army and Navy high command for the guest list and such old natives as the Tuckermans, the Peters and the Wheatleys as hostesses.

Mornings, for the residential ladies, are at present taken up with a series of golf tournaments at Chevy Chase and Congressional Country Clubs, and the subdebs, as always, are swarming the tennis courts and the swimming pools.

Active Year Faces Club In Crafton

A GLANCE at the committees of any organization gives one a fairly good idea of the scope of that organization's work. This is aptly illustrated in the new year books of the Crafton Woman's Club, the first pages of which are devoted to listing the departmental personnel of the club, this being the first full season in which the club has operated in departments. Mrs. J. R. Barclay is chairman and Mrs. L. P. Myers, vice chairman, of the drama department; Mrs. W. E. Brossius, chairman, and Mrs. James W. Napier, vice chairman, of the home department; Mrs. David E. Culley, chairman, and Mrs. E. V. Braden, vice chairman, department of literature, and Mrs. Ira M. Smith, chairman, and Mrs. A. L. Schiel, vice chairman, of the music department. The committees are headed as follows: Program, Mrs. R. W. Turney; benevolent, Mrs. J. P. Mahan; blind, Mrs. L. G. Stone; child welfare, Mrs. J. E. Salkvist; club house, Mrs. Sherman Massingham; education, Mrs. J. N. Martin; finance, Mrs. F. C. Barr; forestry, Mrs. Nina Hood McCullough; Girl Scouts, Mrs. R. R. Stuart; horticulture, Mrs. E. N. Zern; hospitality, Mrs. George W. Hill; juniors, Mrs. A. D. Robb; legislation and civics, Mrs. T. S. Loring; membership, Mrs. T. F. Walter; reciprocity, Mrs. A. J. Reber; social, Mrs. Paul W. McMahon.

In their programs this year the members will learn of "Mexico, Land of Tradition and Romance," beginning the season October 4 with a pageant devoted to "memories and visions." Five-minute talks by members on several of the programs give promise of many interesting features, for in this way "The Ancient Glories of Mexico," its scenic beauties and other points will be brought to the attention of the club-audience. In addition the plans for the year include an address by the Rev. Dr. E. J. Van Etten on "Rushing Through Russia," talks on "Home Life in Mexico" by Miss Mary Waters and "The Religious and Political Situation" by Theodore Reith, a talk on "Sightless Seeing" by Mrs. C. C. Taylor, programs in charge of the various departments, a reciprocity day tea, an evening with the juniors, a talk by Dr. N. A. N. Cleven on "Factors at Play in Our Relation With Mexico," the annual banquet and the closing business meeting and tea.

Triumph Chapter Party Wednesday

TRIUMPH CHAPTER NO. 136, Order of Eastern Star, will give a garden party Wednesday at the home of Mrs. A. O. Engelhardt in Glenshaw. Cards will be played in the afternoon and evening. Mrs. Anna Edgar is chairman.

Plan Fund Card Party In Carrick

TO COMPLETE the amount set as the annual goal for the Maud A. Gearing memorial scholarship fund, several committees of the Carrick Mothers' Club are co-operating in giving a bridge luncheon Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Carl Kerr in the boulevard. Reservations are to be made through Mrs. E. C. Trott before Monday evening. Assisting Mrs. Kerr are Mrs. W. C. McClure, Mrs. Trott, Mrs. John Robson, Mrs. Mildred Reinlander, Mrs. William Rockhill, Mrs. M. Ulrich, Mrs. J. P. Taylor, Mrs. E. R. Davis, Mrs. Harry New, Mrs. John Rossiter, Mrs. Frank Beech and Mrs. John T. Anderson. The sum of $3,000 is to be set aside for the scholarship, the amount to be raised over a period of three years. September will mark the close of the first year.

27th Ward Women To Meet Tomorrow

THE July meeting of the Woman's Community Association of the Twenty-seventh Ward will be held Monday night in the Reformed Church of the Ascension, Termon avenue.

McDonald Club Opens On Sept. 25

SEPTEMBER 25 will see the opening of the Woman's Club of McDonald. On that day the officers will receive the members and the year book will be presented. The literary department will have charge of the first program meeting on October 9, and later that month, at a general meeting, Dr. Harvey M. Watkins will speak. Reports from the County and State Federations will be heard at the November meeting, and again in December the literary department will take charge of the meeting, supervising a program of Christmas readings. Mrs. R. M. Weir will discuss "National Parks" at the first meeting in January, the second one being a guest day, with Miss Jane McDonald and Mrs. P. L. Coulter as hostesses. Mrs. G. W. Smith and Mrs. H. M. Kelso will present an educational discussion as February's program feature, while March will bring a dramatic sketch, "Mrs. Pat and the Law," directed by Mrs. J. N. McDonald and, at the second meeting, a talk by Dr. Amelia A. Dranga. The literary department will provide a sketch for the April meeting, the civic, home economics and garden departments taking over the program on May 14, and the season closing May 28 with the annual business meeting.

Alumnae Secretary Arranges Musicale

MRS. EDITH COFFIN MITCHELL, of Passaic, N. J., is a guest of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Elsie Breese Mitchell, chairman of the Congress of Clubs music department. Mrs. Mitchell, who is national secretary of the Alumnae Association of Miss Mason's school, The Castle, Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson, is here to arrange for a musicale which the alumnae will give in the Congress clubhouse in the fall. Mrs. Mitchell's husband, R. A. Mitchell, will come to Pittsburgh later and, together they expect to motor to Detroit and then home by way of Northern New York.

Busy Season In Prospect At Congress

ALREADY one can see the wheels beginning to move at the Congress of Clubs in preparation for the season's whirl of activities. The welfare and health departments have been combined and will function as one department under the chairmanship of Mrs. C. W. Parker, while Dr. Amelia A. Dranga will continue as chairman of the medical scholarship, which will be administered independently. Mrs. Parker's staff includes Mrs. Robert S. Clarke, recording secretary; Mrs. J. A. Hastings, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Walter Browne, chairman for the blind; Mrs. D. F. Harrison, chairman of reading for the blind, and Mrs. James E. Bay, chairman of hospitality. The department's season will begin with the customary luncheon on October 15 when the Salvation Army and the welfare will be discussed. The various committees will have charge of the programs during the remainder of the year.

Organization complete, the educational department is ready to begin its season's work. Mrs. D. Edwin Miller has again been appointed chairman of the department. Mrs. C. Watson Kenney is co-chairman in charge of the program; Mrs. L. L. Hartley, recording, and Mrs. Robert T. Alexander, corresponding secretary; Mrs. George A. Eckels, treasurer; Mrs. Frank L. Schomberg, assistant treasurer, and these chairmen: Mrs. Joseph B. Drake, Americanization; Mrs. E. V. Carothers, hospitality; Mrs. E. P. Schempp, home safety; Mrs. W. C. McClure, music; Mrs. Otilla Sheppard, parent-teachers; Miss Louise Blessing, scholarship; Mrs. O. B. Hughes, schools co-operation; Mrs. W. E. Brosius, county schools; Mrs. James McNeil, historian; Mrs. Mary Murphy, special schools; Mrs. D. F. Harrison, reciprocity; Mrs. R. T. Lewis, religious education; Mrs. S. J. Corbett, thrift; Mrs. Charles S. Hutchison, correction and restoration; Mrs. Frank J. Boyle, membership; Mrs. W. J. Fendner, patriotic instruction.

The thrift committee will contribute to the club house, having taken steps towards that end when the members demonstrated a bridge table cover holder at the recent bridge breakfast of the Congress.

Swimming Classes To Start Tomorrow

THE Central Branch of the Young Woman's Christian Association will offer another intensive swimming class during August. This class will meet on Monday and Wednesday nights from tomorrow to August 28 at 7 o'clock. A beginners' class at 8 o'clock will follow. Outdoor tennis may be played on the Lawrenceville Y. W. C. A. court every Tuesday evening and the East Liberty court every Thursday evening during August.

Prospective Bride Honored at Bridge

MRS. J. J. McGEHEE, of Cochran road, Mt. Lebanon, entertained yesterday afternoon at a bridge luncheon in the Wildwood Country Club in honor of Miss Elizabeth Lidell Donnell, of Jackson street, East End, whose marriage to Clayton J. Pinkerton, of Ingram, will take place September 9. Garden flowers were used for decorations.

Mrs. Hughes Opens Her Summer Home

MRS. O. B. HUGHES, president of the Allegheny County Parent-Teacher Association, has opened her summer home at Geneva-on-the-Lake and is there with her family.

NEW CASTLE BRIDE

MRS. WILLIAM JENNERS CHEW was Miss Dorothy Seavy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Seavy, of Highland avenue, New Castle, before her marriage on July 24. Mr. Chew is a son of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Chew, of Port Norris, N. J. After an eastern trip, Mr. and Mrs. Chew will make their home in New Castle. The bride attended the Harcum School at Bryn Mawr and Mr. Chew attended the University of Pennsylvania.

'400' Is Indulging In 'Sport of Kings'

captured the feature of the opening day, the Saratoga Handicap, and added $8,250 to the Phipps coffers. Mrs. W. F. Hitt was right on hand though in that race with Hot Toddy, a very close second. Imagine the cheers that greeted the colors of these two very well-known members of the set when their horses made a race like that!

But Mrs. Payne Whitney, not to be outdone by her friendly enemies, on the second day's racing entered her prize horse, Coronation, in the Shillelah steeplechase, a most dashing race. And Coronation went over the hedges of the beautiful Saratoga course in such style that at the finish he brought $3,525 to his fair owner.

Perfect Sportsmen

But certainly we shall hear from the horses of many others. Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt and Mrs. Charles Minot Avery have in their stables horses that will undoubtedly claim some part of the $600,000 prizes offered for the Saratoga racing season. Mrs. Vanderbilt's Sarazen II, is especially highly regarded among the track experts. Mrs. J. H. Alexander, Mrs. George Sloane, Mrs. William Ziegler, Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark, Mrs. Louise Kaufman and Mrs. Herbert Pulitzer are only a few more of those from whom winners are expected.

As for the men—well, they will not mind being omitted here. I am sure they appreciate far more the "raves" of the sporting writers. But I will say this. Both the men and the women are certainly showing themselves perfect sportsmen when their horses are in the field.

Among those who entertained on the opening day were Mrs. Mesta, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel D. Riddle, Harry Payne Whitney, the William Woodwards, Mrs. Sloane, the Walter J. Salmons, Peter Roberts, Henry Disston, Algernon Daingerfield and many others. Every table in the terraced clubhouse was taken by some one familiar to those in the social whirl. Many came from Newport and Southampton by motor for the thrill of the racing and to me they did not look a bit disappointed at beautiful Saratoga.

Clark Weddings

And now may I add just a note—concerning not Saratoga but the doings of the junior George Crawford Clarks, who promise to steal the biggest spotlight of the Rhode Island resort that we know so well. Their son, George Crawford Clark III will take the fateful matrimonial step on August 17 with Lily Dulany Cushing, daughter of Mrs. James Denison Sawyer. While on August 24 Miss Caroline Clark will be wed to Arthur Nye McGeoch, Jr. The first event will be at Newport, while the second wedding is to be at Bar Harbor, Me.

I coul tell you plenty more of those at the races and those going to the altar—but I find my space limit has been reached while the news source seems unlimited.

McKeesport Women To Honor Leader

THE Woman's Club of McKeesport will open its season on October 4 with a president's day program honoring its new executive, Mrs. J. H. W. Simpson. Assisting the president will be Mrs. W. H. Coleman, first vice president; Mrs. George Richards, second vice president; Mrs. V. A. Auld, recording secretary; Mrs. Fred McCune, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Fred Steadman, treasurer.

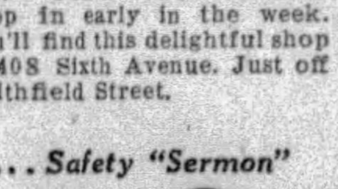
MADELON'S MIRROR OF FEMININE FANCY

WHAT if August is hot? I can find excuses for any month that brings forth the unusual buying events that I've had an early glimpse of in my travels about Pittsburgh's smart shops. Midsummer sales seem to have the stage. Furs, glassware, shoes, lingerie—everything which is of interest to women is selling at remarkably low prices. I've had a delightful week, personally, just watching the plans for these sales mature. And I know you are going to have an equally good time taking full advantage of them. Those who haven't yet taken their vacation or those who have just returned—will find these sales opportune. If I may, I suggest you set aside an extra day or two for shopping tours next week. There is a decided suggestion of the Fall and "between season" modes which are interesting. Again I say, I don't mind August—in fact I like August, for it's a month of real events for shoppers.

. . . Tasteful

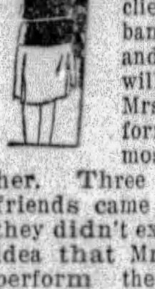
I LIKE Maxine's; it's usually my first call in the week and dropping in there is really a wonderful tonic for the "Blue Monday" feeling. For I invariably see something so charming and refreshing that I forget it's hot and Monday. This week it was a delightful satin suit. It's exquisite from its finely tailored collar to its knife-pleated skirt. A separate blouse of eggshell satin beneath a jacket of finger-tip length gives a charming effect to the whole. It is tastefully trimmed with reverse crepe. Truly, a delightful garment for the coming months. It can be had in all tasteful combinations—eggshell and blue, eggshell and black, brown and orange and others, and only $25. You'll like Maxine's. Drop in early in the week. You'll find this delightful shop at 408 Sixth Avenue. Just off Smithfield Street.

. . . Safety "Sermon"



WHILE we women refuse to admit any inferiority in the matter of driving automobiles, I am afraid we must plead guilty to the charge that we are negligent in keeping our cars in safe working order. The matter of tires for instance—I never fully realized how grave was the danger of not having tires inspected frequently, until I talked with Jim Campbell, of Campbell & Company. He pointed out to me how carefully the railroads inspect the trucks of the trains about every hundred miles between here and New York, while motorists drive hundreds of miles without ever looking at the tires. The danger from blow-out at high speed actually scared me. Equipping the car all around with General Balloon "8" and a moment or two checking these tires occasionally is the answer to the safety problems. If you are going to drive at high speeds (and who can resist the temptation?), by all means be sure of your tires. Campbell & Company's shop is at Bigelow Boulevard and Bloomfield Bridge.

. . . Converted



GRANTED—it's a woman's prerogative to change her mind. I had an interesting example of three women changing their minds at Mrs. Lasner's, corsetier premier, in the Clark Building. One new client from a suburban town came in and expressed her willingness to allow Mrs. Lasner to perform one of her almost miracles on her. Three of the lady's friends came with her. While they didn't exactly scoff at the idea that Mrs. Lasner could perform the miracle, they were at best politely skeptical. In her friendly, intelligent manner Mrs. Lasner proceeded to explain the necessary steps in remolding the figure. In a few more minues—not one, but the remaining three were preparing themselves for Mrs. Lasner to solve their problems, too. They came in skeptics but went away enthusiastic believers in Mrs. Lasner. Incidents of this nature happen every day in Mrs. Lasner's studio, 615 Clark Building.

. . . Miniature Billboard

ON THE shady side of Wood Street the other day I lingered a few moments before the attractive windows of McClements Company. The flower and fruit displays looked so cool and inviting that I lingered a little longer than I would want the office to know. But I was rewarded, for I gathered a real tip for you. Every week McClements is having a special. This is announced on just a small card in the window. However, though the card is far from billboard size, it tells of a real value. Candlesticks, for instance, the card announces, will be sold this week at fifty cents a pair. On inspecting them I can assure you they are worth twice that much. You do well to stop a moment or two at 535 Wood Street and read the miniature billboard every week during these special offerings.

. . . "Help Wanted"

THERE is usually some particular feature that I like about a shop which I can catalogue, but—I've given up trying to decide just what I like most about the Graham Hair Shop, 222 Jenkins Arcade. It may be the genuinely cordial greeting of Nancy Ann Bryson, the manager, or the sincere interest she takes in each patron. The fact that this shop has the exclusive rights in the city to the Ogilvie Sisters' facials is important, too. As you know, the Graham Hair Shop specializes also in the Frigidine Permanent wave. It seems this shop is just unique, both in its services and methods. If you haven't yet treated yourself to the supreme delight of having your "beautifying" done at Graham Hair Shop, don't delay another week. Call Atlantic 8392 for appointment. Remember that this is the only shop in town in which you can secure the Ogilvie facial products.

. . . The Answer

I KNOW a book which should be a "best seller," providing it were for sale—but it isn't. It is a little booklet given free by the Pittsburgh Natatorium, helpfully describing methods of developing the ideal body. It is called "Body Culture." In order to meet the demand of modern women for scientific care of the body, the Pittsburgh Natatorium has compiled a booklet describing the various devices in use in their body cultural laboratories, with their effects on physical and nervous systems. Charts and measurements for the ideal proportions of men and women are furnished, together with carefully compiled advice on reducing and building. With especial attention to the modern woman, this booklet tells you about Burdick Body Culturors, Burdick Light Baths, Ultra-Violet and Infra-Red Baths, the Scotch Douche in simple parlance. "Body Culture" may be had free by writing for it or calling in person at the Pittsburgh Natatorium, Duquesne Way.

. . . Thrills

AMONG my friends there is one who is positively "air minded." She flies every possible moment she can and is enthusiastic about getting a pilot's license. She also drives a Lincoln and is equally enthusiastic about that. For she tells me that driving her Lincoln is much like flying—the power, speed and easy handling of her superb car supply her with a genuine thrill. The Lincoln offers other thrills, too—its beauty and quiet lines which reflect the good taste of the owner. It is as comfortable and easy riding as it is good looking—in fact it just embodies all that a fine car should have. If you haven't seen the new models, I suggest that you call the Lowe Motor Company, 5124 Liberty Ave., the number is Montrose 8062. A single demonstration will convince you that no car but the Lincoln will do.

. . . Vacation Specials

THE mothers who decided upon August to take the kiddies out of the heat of the city are indeed fortunate. Aside from escaping the extreme heat—the task and expense of getting clothes for youngsters is greatly simplified by the Reduction Sale at the Jay Kiddie Shoppe, 3007 Jenkins Arcade, which starts Monday. They are real reductions, too. 25% off on all hat and coat sets, and 15% off on all boys' suits and girls' dresses. The latter are all sleeveless garments—ideal for the youngsters' vacation. Rompers and creepers are also offered in good selection at 15% discount. At the reduced prices smart mothers will surely purchase an adequate supply—not only for vacation but for the rest of the summer. I know you'll like the selection, too. You'll find the Jay Kiddie Shoppe at 3007 Jenkins Arcade. I suggest you pay an early call there.

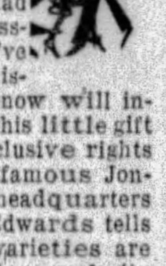
. . . August Fur Sale

YOU know the reputation J. C. Connolly has as a furrier—you know the type of merchandise he handles and his unique selection—now let me tell you about his August Fur Sale which is just getting under way, for I am sure you don't know enough about that. Here are just a few of the sale features—a beautiful Persian Lamb Coat at $525; a Russian Caracul Coat with natural Persian Lamb undercollar, $685; Bronze Caracul with Mink dyed Kolinsky, $525; Silver Fox Scarf, $385; Natural Cross Fox Scarf, $295—but why go on? It would take the rest of these columns to set down everything I saw worthy of mention. Some of the coats are positively precious, yet among them are less expensive ones. You will like the prices during this August Sale and I advise an early visit for I feel that Mr. Connolly's show room is going to be a mighty popular place. You'll find it on the third floor at 207 Fifth Ave.

. . . Extra Vacation

LAST week I recounted an incident at Ritter & Morrison's, 501 Liberty Avenue. A girl who had ruined her vacation, because of ill-fitting footwear, came in to get a pair of Menihan Arch-Aid shoes. Well, she has been back to Ritter & Morrison's for the second pair and is enjoying them so much that she plans to steal just a few more days for a vacation—return to the same mountains and hike and dance—do all the things she tried to do before and couldn't because of her shoes. I'll wager she has a good time, too—for these are built for comfort as well as style—giving ample support to the arch, room for the toes and general non-rigid comfort. Visit this store of UNHURRIED SERVICE, with a sales personnel who are thoroughly experienced in assuring proper fitting.

. . . Novelties for Parties

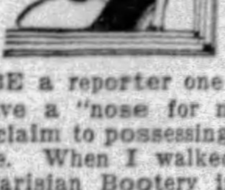


I'VE already had my reward for "discovering" the Edwards Gift Shop in the Seventh Avenue Hotel, Room 250. A reader who had definite ideas on just what she wanted for bridge prizes, visited the shop and found exactly what she wanted to the last detail—as if it had been made expressly for her. I've made another discovery which I know will interest you, too. This little gift shoppe has the exclusive rights to distribute the famous Joncaire Parfums (headquarters in Paris). Miss Edwards tells me that three varieties are enjoying unusual popularity—the Riviera, Flambante Jeunesse, and Un Peu d' Orient. A modernistic compact, product of the same company, is positively unique. I know you will be as thrilled with these and the other novelties I've seen. And prices—even on the imported parfums, creams and powders are exceptionally reasonable. Do visit Miss Edwards when you are downtown.

. . . Midsummer Event

I'VE had a delightful week—the summer sales are in full swing and nowhere was I happier amidst more unique bargains than at Reizenstein's. It seems that everything one could want is priced exceptionally low during this Summer Buying event. I saw interesting Georgian Glassware, period design etched on crystal bowls with green stems. A set of six stemware items sold six for $6.00. Eight-inch plates sell for $16 a dozen, while the 7-inch plates are offered for $14.00 a dozen. Others of Rococo design with pink stems are priced low. Limonges China I found at exactly half price. Unique black Greek Key border design on good gold background. Dinner Plates $1.25; Salad Plates $1.15 each; Teas $1.40 each; and Bouillons $1.45. Other articles priced proportionately. I assure you that you can spend an interesting and profitable hour at Reizenstein's, 625 Liberty Avenue.

. . . Good News



TO BE a reporter one must have a "nose for news." I lay claim to possessing such a nose. When I walked into the Parisian Bootery in the Roosevelt Hotel and saw the proprietors in an earnest conference, in which prices were frequently mentioned, I knew something big was "breaking." Perhaps you've guessed it too—the Final Clearance Sale starts tomorrow. And such a sale—even for the Parisian Bootery, whose sales are always outstanding, this is unique. Eight hundred pairs of typical Parisian Bootery footwear go on sale at $4.85. These shoes sell ordinarily from $7 to $15. I propose to be there early and I am sure that many of you who know values will be with me. If you don't take advantage of this special sale—you will actually miss an important event. Imagine being able to buy two or three pairs of shoes for the price of one! You will find the Parisian Bootery in the Roosevelt Hotel—Penn Avenue side.

. . . Superior Solution

YOU'VE heard the cry, and probably uttered it yourself, after a finger wave, "My hair is positively dusty." You know how annoying it is, especially when you have just devoted time and money to improve the appearance of your hair—almost enough to decide against another wave. This wouldn't be the case if you had had your finger wave at the Maison Frederic, under the competent and careful supervision of M. Lichti. He explained to me that the absence of the powdery and flaky feeling of the hair after his treatment is due to the use of a superior waving solution, one which allows the hair to dry quickly and leaves it soft and fluffy. If you have experienced this brittleness, by all means visit Maison Frederic, at 207 Fifth Avenue (third floor), and you'll be delighted with the results. Remember, M. Lichti takes a personal interest in each patron, new or old—which is most likely the reason for Maison Frederic's real popularity.

. . . "Luckee Girl"

AS FASHION decrees a suitable foundation garment, so has fashion created one. It is called the "Luckee Girl" and is presented by Myrtle Bennett's lingerie shop in the Jenkins Arcade. This "all in one" foundation garment is primarily comfortable, flexible and free from stays or boning. It gently molds the body to the figure of the day by proportioning it to the proper dimensions. A natural effect results. It has a patent diaphragm control. Its completeness — eliminating the necessity of any other undergarments—is unique. It is styled with sunback and V-front in keeping with the vogue. Equally effective for stout and slim figures—"Luckee Girl" really is the ideal garment for enhancing loveliness of any figure. When you are downtown, just call on Miss Bennett and let her explain its features. Priced moderately, too—$6.95. Miss Bennett's Shop is on the second floor of the Jenkins Arcade.

. . . Join Now!

YOU may think it a little premature and downright personal of me to ask "Where are you going to spend your next vacation?" But when you understand that the reason for the question is to remind you this is the time to plan it, you'll forgive me. At least you should plan the financing of it—which seems, oh so important. The Purpose Club of the Union Savings Bank will assist you in this matter. You can join now—make a deposit weekly as much as you see fit, and fifty weeks from today, or when it's time for your next vacation you'll receive a check for the full amount plus the interest. You'll be surprised how steadily your Purpose fund will grow and delighted with it when it's time for use. Next year you may do some of the things you couldn't this time—if you join the Purpose Club at once (Frick Bldg.)

. . . Clear Complexion

IF I hadn't seen with my own eyes what it did for a friend's face and neck, I'd find it hard to believe just how miraculously a single, easily used preparation removes freckles, pimples, signs of age and other skin blemishes. If your skin is marred with unsightly blemishes or if it is muddy and oily, use a few drops of this milk-foam liquid regularly and you will see a marked improvement in three or four days. This wonderful preparation is used instead of a cleansing cream and it also nourishes and protects the skin, reduces large pores and leaves your skin so smooth and soft you will need no other powder base. It actually cleans away the blemishes and makes your skin lovely and clear. It is only $2.00 a bottle that goes a long, long way. If you write to me I will tell you where to get it or send me your name and address with a $2.00 bill and I will have a bottle sent to you by return mail. I can recommend Milk-Foam, made by Pedorcin Laboratories, 79 West 50th St., New York City.

. . . Chair Psychology

HAVE you ever considered just how expressive a single chair can be? I've become much more conscious of it since I've been dropping into Gilbert's, the distinctive furniture store, 632 Smithfield St. One chair in particular captured my eye and I felt that I would like to just relax in it for a few minutes. While I was thinking of this, a client entered and in a short while was discussing the merits of the same chair with Mr. Gilbert. "It's just the chair one would select for a short stay—without taking off one's wraps," she said. I was pleased to know that she, too, caught the spirit of the chair as I did. And every piece of furniture in the store is equally expressive. Because Gilbert's is a custom-built house—you can get exactly what you want made up to the last degree of tastefulness. You may have any color combinations in antique velvets, brocatels, damasks and other materials; and, of course, Gilbelt's all-year moderate prices prevail.

. . . Scientific Cleanliness

BOOKS have been written on "how to have beautiful hair," says Mr. Wardell, of the Stanley Wardell Studios, 207 Clark Building, "but after it is all boiled down, it resolves itself to one thing—scientific cleanliness of the scalp and hair." Our only business is the care of the scalp and hair, and each and every operator is a graduated operator in this one particular vocation. I will take ANY lady, and regardless of the present condition of her hair, we will give her one professional application in our studio, and she will admit that there is more sheen, lustre and contour to her hair than she thought it were possible to have, and too, your scalp will fairly breathe, because it is "scientifically cleansed." Gray hair is not indicative of old age, but it is suggestive, and an interview with Mr. Wardell, without any obligation on your part, will prove to you that those gray hairs can be restored to their natural color. It is quite necessary you phone Atlantic 9441 in advance of your calling for an appointment, either for professional work or for an interview.

Stylists Achieve High Degree of Variability In Summer Costuming

By PEARL GROSS.
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

SUMMER fashions are lingering longer this year because women find them delightful.

Not for a long time—years, really—have such an array of charming, comfortable and altogether lovely frocks, shoes, hats and wardrobe accessories been offered on the feminine altars of fashion. The stylists proudly admit that they have achieved variability and individuality in costuming this summertime season.

Thus we still see straw hats being worn in town this month, and there is more than a hint that the ladies will continue to wear straws until the middle of September. This isn't based so much on common sense, alas, as the fact that summer frocks are very smart and good-looking to a flattering degree. Their wearers are loath to put them aside for the drabber, natural tones of the Fall season.

Summer sales are going on right now in the exclusive shops. Wise women are buying, buying, buying—for next year. This is a splendid idea, because it is safe to wager that next Summer's styles will not be very different from this year's and certainly some of the sales are phenomenally inexpensive and tempting.

Good for 1930

The height of this season's successes which are sure to come in for a renaissance next year are sleeveless dresses and flowered chiffons. In the daytime sleeveless frock collections there are interesting powder blue dresses that came at the tag-end of the summer, when milady suddenly realized this color was stunning with sun-tan make-up.

Anna Fitziu, the famous operatic diva, wore just such a frock at the Central Park Casino one afternoon last week. She also wore one of Reboux's choicest models, imported here by Mercedes. This was a natural colored baku, poke bonnet shape, with a cluster of black velvet ribbon flowers deftly woven through the straw on the right and left sides of the brim.

Bright yellow is second in popularity, next to powder blue. It is especially winning on the beach as a "sun" color. Swimming suits and pajamas show partiality to bright yellow, too, as do straw hats and the newest tailored underwear.

New Beret

Le Monnier sends America a new fabric beret made of crepe or jersey to match sport costumes. But wait! The price mark on "originals" is $28.00. A little expensive for those women who buy by the budget system. It won't be long, however, before American milliners turn out excellent copies of the Le Monnier beret.

Another sprightly note in headgear is an angora tam that retails for $10.00 hereabouts. It comes in all the pastel and vivid shades. Its sponsors call it "frightfully smart," even for fall wear. Admittedly, this new type angora tam is jaunty and cool for afternoon frocks and sportswear.

Now they've introduced pajama jewelry made by Marcel Rechas, Henry a la Pensee, Patou and Maggy Reuff. Glass, cork and wood make up these beads and bracelets which have been pronounced the proper thing to wear in the boudoir. This is a unique fad, to say least and a number of chorus girls in town have utilized the pajama jewelry as "just the thing" to wear for stage dancing because it is light, cool and doesn't bang against the neck.

MRS. MEYER RUTTENBERG, of New York, who was Miss Mary Liebman, of Squirrel Hill, before her recent marriage.

AUTOMOBILES THE SUNDAY SUN-TELEGRAPH And RESORTS
PITTSBURGH, AUGUST 4, 1929

IN THE BUCKEYE STATE

A SUN-TELEGRAPH MOTORLOGUE

OHIO, the Buckeye State, has many attractions for motoring tourists. Its lakes, industries, towns and memorials are known throughout the country. Akron, one of its leading cities, is the center of the rubber industry in this country and produces more tires and rubber goods than any other city in the world.

CANTON, another prominent city of that state, was the home of William McKinley. The McKinley Memorial there is the burial place of the martyred President and his wife and is one of the show places of that city. It also has one of the largest brick plants and safe and vault factories in the United States.

ANOTHER city visited on the circle tour into the Buckeye State was Steubenville. That city was the birthplace of Secretary of War Edwin M. Stanton and the father of President Woodrow Wilson. The 255-mile tour was charted in a Nash advanced Six Sedan, provided by the Nash-Pittsburgh Motor Co.

TOUR IN OHIO REVEALS MARVELS OF INDUSTRY

Akron, World's Biggest Tire Center, One of High Spots; Steel Towns Along Route, McKinley Memorial and Lakes Interest.

By H. W. DIETRICH,
Automobile Editor.

(This is the twentieth of a series of weekly Motorlogues suggesting automobile trips to points of interest in Pennsylvania and adjoining states. The routes are all charted by a good scouting party and all the highways designated are in good condition, unless otherwise stated. A run into West Virginia next week.)

EASTERN OHIO offers many opportunities to motoring tourists. The lakes are known throughout the country, and its industries, its cities and its memorials annually attract many thousands of visitors.

To combine a number of these attractions into one tour was the objective of the Sun-Telegraph Motorlogue road scouting party last week. This was accomplished to good advantage over a route that totals 255 miles and includes in its itinerary Steubenville, Canton, Akron, Salem and Columbiana. The roads, which with few exceptions are in good condition, were charted in a Nash Advanced Six sedan, loaned by the Nash-Pittsburgh Motor Company.

The first objective on the tour after leaving Pittsburgh is Carnegie. This town is reached to best advantage by way of the Noblestown road. Crossing the Point Bridge, a right turn is made on West Carson street, followed by a left turn on South Main street and a left trun to Noblestown road.

VIA WEST VIRGINIA

A right turn is made just after crossing the bridge over Chartiers Creek in Carnegie. This avenue leads to the Campbell's Run road, which is followed through to the Steubenville pike. The road from this point on will be found well marked. Because of the work of reconstructing the Steubenville pike, a detour route through Oakdale, McDonald, Burgettstown and Follansbee, W. Va., is used, which is in fair condition throughout. A sharp right turn in Oakdale calls for caution and a close observance of signs in Burgettstown is necessary. In the latter town Route 18 is followed to the first hard-road intersection to the right at the west of the town.

The run over the state line and into West Virginia has much of interest. In Follansbee, a steel manufacturing town of note, a right turn is made over the river highway to the first passenger bridge, a toll crossing. The bridge is the gateway to Steubenville and to Ohio Route 43, the next artery of travel for the tour. Steubenville is best known as a center for iron, steel, paper, glass and clay manufacturing and coal mining. It obtained its name from Fort Seuben, which was erected on the banks of the Ohio River at that location in 1786 and named in honor of the Prussian general, Baron Von Steuben, of Gen. Washington's staff.

WILSON HOME

Joseph Wilson, father of Woodrow Wilson, was born there and the grandparents of the war president are buried there. Edwin M. Stanton, secretary of war in Lincoln's cabinet, was born in that city in 1814.

The ride into the Buckeye state from Steubenville is one of the most interesting in the entire state. It follows through and along the ridges of a series of hills and many interesting panoramas await the tourists. Richmond and Amsterdam are two of the interesting towns passed on the route. The latter is followed by Harlem Springs, at one time one of Ohio's noted resorts. It was the seat of one of the earliest academies and its mineral springs attracted many famous visitors, including the Confederate war leader, Robert E. Lee.

Carrollton, the new municipality, is the birthplace of the "Fighting McCooks" as well as the county seat of Carroll County. The "Fighting McCooks" were members of the two principal branches of the McCook family of that town, who contributed 15 commissioned officers and one private soldier to the fighting forces of the nation during the Civil War. Daniel McCook also was the first clerk of courts of that county. The McCook homestead is opposite the court house.

McKINLEY'S TOMB

Malvern and Waynesburg are the gateways to Canton over Ohio Route 43. Canton was the home of William McKinley, and the McKinley National Monument, the last resting place of the martyred President, is one of the beauty spots of the city. Just opposite the old McKinley home is McKinley High

REST—Members of the road scouting party and the Nash Advanced Six sedan scout car. This photograph is a good illustration of the type of country to be seen.

AIRPORT—A small section of the airport on the outskirts of Akron. In this picture are seen an airplane leaving the field, a refueling operation and the steel framework of a huge dirigible hangar in the background. The Akron airport is one of the largest in this part of the country. It is on Route 241, also known as Massillon road.

Auto Dealers Protest Free Motor Shows

National Officer Points Out Private Displays of Manufacturers Destroys Interest in Big Exhibits

By RAY PRIEST.

DETROIT, Aug. 3.

THE National Automobile Dealers' Association has come out strongly against the private showings of new motors during the automobile show season, announcing that the free exhibitions staged by several of the more aggressive manufacturers hurt the sales of all.

C. A. Vane, general manager of the association, also calls attention to the practice of manufacturers showing six months' old cars as newest creations, urging that this also is detrimental to everybody's business.

The dealers have evidently awakened to a fact that the public already knew. Last year's attendance at the automobile shows fell off badly from that of former years. The public knew that it was being duped in some cases and its natural reaction was to refuse to go near the scene of its duping.

LOST IN ATTENDANCE

The private shows were ballyhooed extensively and those that were really seeking sight of new automobile creations decided that they would see them in those private displays and let it go at that.

The New York and Chicago national automobile shows in January, both supported by the manufacturers, suffered serious loss in attendance of the general public, although dealers and men within the automobile industry attended in larger numbers than ever before.

The situation now is obvious to everyone and the Association of Automobile Show Managers is sure to devise some way to make the 1930 shows more attractive and well worth the attendance of the majority of the people in every city.

OPENS NEW BUILDING

Vane also calls his organization's attention to the fact that the present low prices on tires cannot last. He says that raw rubber selling close to 20 cents a pound is unprofitable and sure to go up.

The Cadillac Motor Car Company has opened its new million dollar engineering building and today formally dedicated it to the progress of engineering in the automobile world.

The General Motors Corporation executive committee made a formal inspection this morning and the ceremony of formal opening was carried on under the direction of Lawrence P. Fisher, president, and E. W. Seaholm, chief engineer.

FEW ACCIDENTS LAID TO WOMEN

Here's a shock for men drivers!

A recent survey conducted in 30 states showed that only five per cent of all accidents were due to women driving cars.

It also was found that on an average more women drivers bring in their cars at regular intervals for mechanical checkup, which includes brake inspection. This, it is held, practically eliminated mishaps due to the failure of a vital part of their cars.

Loose Parts Cause Engine Vibration

When troubled with vibration in a car, see that the bolts holding the engine—clutch-transmission unit to the frame are all perfectly tight. Sometimes the fan is out of balance, due to the bending of its blades. On account of leakage of gas, one of the cylinders will give weaker impulses than the others. Careful inspection should be made in order that there is nothing about the car that is loose and can thus be set shaking so as to exaggerate the engine vibration. A bent driving shaft, misalignment of wheels, loose top and many other things may make a car vibrate.

MANY CAUSES IF AUTO LAGS

When a car lacks its usual snap and get-away, check for the following:

Manifold gasket leaks.
Improved valve clearance.
Leaks past piston rings.
Faulty carburetor adjustment; high or low float level.
Shortage of fuel due to clogged line or screens.
Fouled or improperly gapped spark plugs.
Worn or improperly spaced breaker points.

Pittsburgh-Indiana Road Cut 5 Miles

Another Pittsburgh-Indiana connection over improved roads is to be established by closing the only remaining gap on Route 156, between Shady Plain and South Bend. When this construction is completed a new and short alternate route from Pittsburgh to Indiana will be provided. Traffic will be able to follow the William Penn Highway, U. S. Route No. 22, from Wilkinsburg to the intersection with Traffic Route No. 80; thence over Traffic Route No. 80 to Sardis, via Rodi and Trestle; Traffic Route No. 380, from Bardis to North Washington; Traffic Route No. 66, from North Washington to Apollo; Traffic Route No. 56 and U. S. Route No. 422.

'APPROVED' SIGN BUYERS BILKED

Salesmen for meaningless "approved" signs are reaping a rich harvest at the hands of operators of small inns and wayside homes throughout the country, the American Automobile Association declared Saturday in broadcasting a warning cautioning those catering to motorists to thoroughly investigate the organizations offering such signs before placing them in use.

The A. A. A. advises operators of inns and wayside homes not to pay in advance for "approved" signs.

FUEL FILTERS PREVENT DIRT CLOGS IN LINES

Screens and Drains Clear Gasoline Between Vacuum Tank and Carbureter.

By J. E. SCHIPPER,
Automotive Engineer.

Clogged fuel lines, while they occur frequently, are far more rare than they were a few years ago. More safeguards attend the flow of gasoline from the time it leaves the tank until it is burned, in the modern car, than ever before. This not only helps prevent the clogging of the fuel lines, but also contributes to the improvement of combustion when the fuel reaches the engine.

In practically all parts of the country today, one buys properly filtered gasoline. Even in remote parts of the country the pumps have filters connected with them. In the old days when gasoline was dispensed in five-gallon cans it was not unusual to find all sorts of odds and ends in the gasoline. Once, when taking on fuel back in the "red can" days, the writer can very well remember fishing out of the tank, with a long bent wire, what was technically termed a "quid" of tobacco.

FUEL FILTERS ACCEPTED

Fuel filters as standard equipment are accepted without comment today. Four years ago it was an exceptional car that was thus equipped. For several years the air cleaner has been gradually finding its way into acceptance as a standard piece of equipment. Gasoline filters are inserted in the fuel line so that any impurities are caught before the fuel gets to the vacuum tank or fuel pump. The line is protected by screens again between the fuel pump or vacuum tank and the carbureter. There are also suitable drains for removing water which may accumulate.

One change that will impress any observer in comparing the new engines with the old is in the use of a much shorter intake riser between the carbureter and the manifold. On many cars the carbureter is bolted directly to the manifold with practically no riser at all. Formerally it was considered good practice to have a long pipe from the carbureter to the intake ports. There was a good reason for this, however, as the carbureter had to be kept low because of the use of gravity feed. Certain engineers also thought that a long riser provided a better and more homogeneous mixture.

LESS HEAT APPLIED

One reason for this belief is that there was less heat applied to the manifold in those days than there is today with the result that possibly the long manifold helped in the thorough mixing of the atomized fuel with the air. Heat came to be used when the quality of gasoline fell off to such a degree that is was almost impossible to vaporize the gasoline without it. Now that improved methods of making the fuel have again raised the quality or volatility of the fuel, we find that makers are using even more heat to obtain as dry a gas as possible.

Good distribution of the fuel is one of the first requisites of a fine running engine. It is easier to distribute properly a dry mixture than one which is filled with spray. Good distribution means each and every cylinder receives an equal amount of fuel. When this is the case the explosion in each cylinder will be the same and the motor will fire regularly and evenly.

In a recent article in this column we pointed out how this good distribution was being obtained. A dry mixture is one of the factors which help distribution.

DRAIN TANK OFTEN

The owner must do his part to see that the gasoline line is free. The drain at the bottom of the vacuum tank should be opened once every two or three months. If there is a filter on the gasoline line this will not be as necessary as when there is no filter installed. The filters are very much on the increase. It is seldom that the carburetor will have to be cleaned out but when this is the case it is better not to attempt to remove jets, etc., unless you are very familiar with the device. It is better to leave this work to the service station.

In order that the gasoline be burned properly, care should be taken that the heat controls are properly handled, when any are provided. On some cars the driver has a little more to do with good performance than he had formerly. The manual control of carbureter heat allows the proper amount of pre-heating for all weather and temperature conditions. The automatic system is a little less trouble but the adjustments are not as slose as can be done by hand. Thermostatic control of water, carbureter adjustment and even generator charging rate, however, is now an accomplished fact.

One company has lately put on the market a generator charging rate device which is thermostatically controlled and which can be applied to any car having the third brush system of regulation. This regulator is actuated by temperature conditions in the battery, thus preventing overcharge.

Jordan Net Earnings Show Good Profit

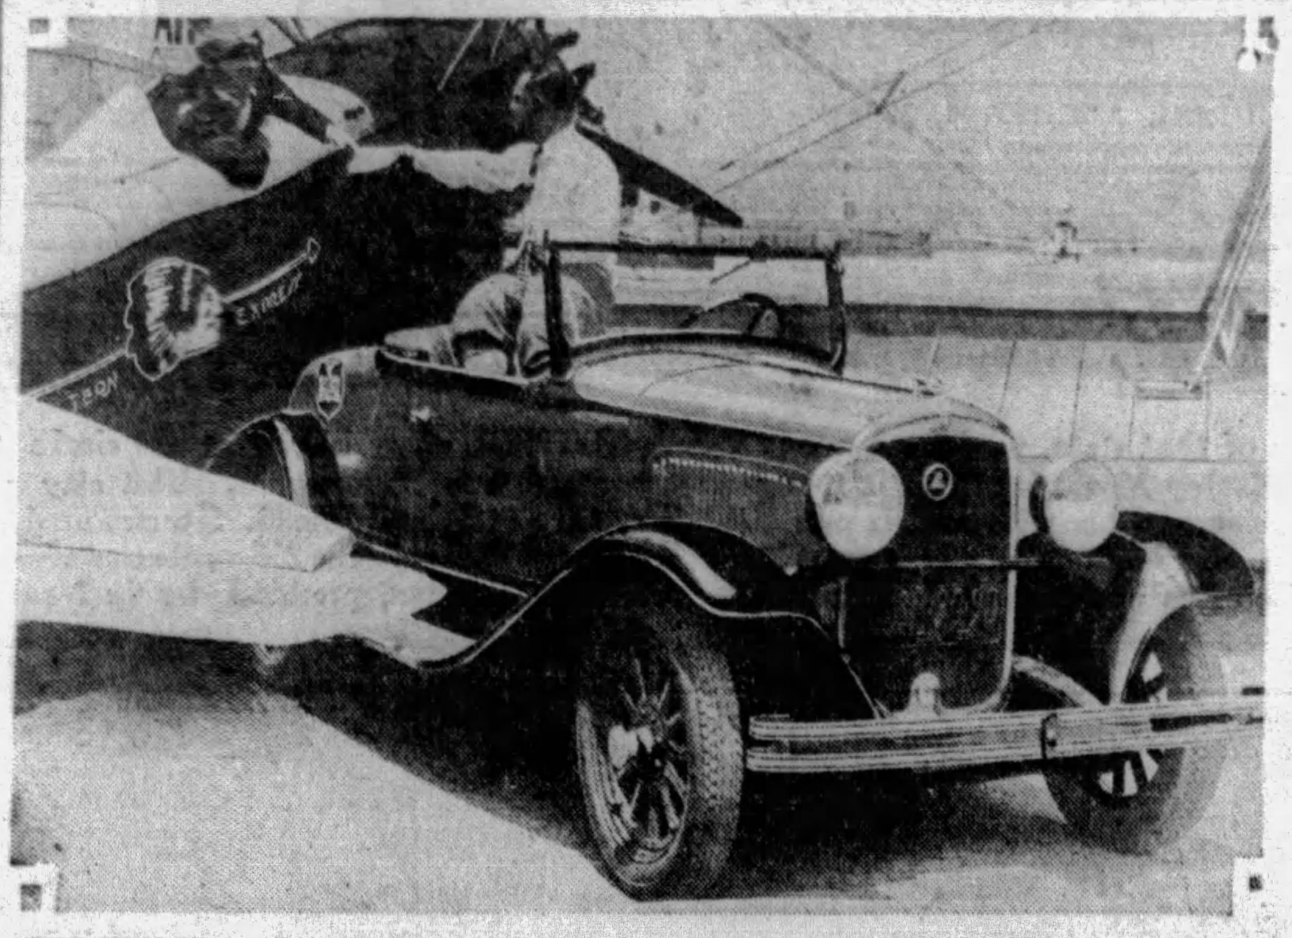
According to a statement just issued by John McArdle, vice president and general manager, the net earnings of the Jordan Motor Car Company for the first half of the year total $151,138.86.

During the same period last year the company lost $473,372.61.

Net earnings for June, after all charges except federal taxes, amounted to $31,034.28, as against a loss of $5[illegible],796.97 in the same month last year.

"The Jordan company now shows a profit surplus of $1,278,794.45," says McArdle, "which compares with a profit and loss deficit on January 1 this year of $3,051,0[illegible].37."

CHAINED IN—MAKES RECORD DRIVE



IN WEST—Harry Smith, chained to Plymouth roadster, handing key to manacles to Western Air Express pilot about to take off from Vail Field, Los Angeles. The key was carried by plane to Detroit and used by Detroit police in unlocking irons which held Smith in car for grueling drive of 2,735 miles. Smith made the distance in 86 hours, 7 minutes actual driving time, averaging 32 miles hour. He used 131 gallons of gasoline, an average of 21 miles to the gallon.

DELAY AVOIDED BY CAR CHECK

KENOSHA, Wis., Aug. 3.—Insurance against traveling delay and the open road annoyances which used to accompany early day motor tourists, is one of the cheapest and simplest items in the American vacation budget, according to service experts of the Nash Motors Company.

Here is the standard "pre-vacation check-up" on the car, suggested in the famous Nash car maintenance system, which promises sweet sailing on the long trails this summer:

Complete lubrication of the car. The standard Nash operation covers every detail, including new oil in the crankcase.

Complete tightening and adjustment of all chassis and body bolts.

Examination of the cooling system. A hose that should be replaced, or a fan belt tightened, is a trifling expense; but if neglected may cause an overheated and damaged engine.

Testing and filling battery.

Adjusting generator charging rate. In hot weather and on long trips the rate should be lowered.

Inspection of all electrical connections.

Cleaning and setting of the ignition distributor.

Check of the clutch adjustment.

Testing of brakes. Perhaps you will be on strange roads and driving at higher speeds than usual, making perfect brakes imperative.

Inspection of lighting system.

Adjustment of carburetor.

Testing for excess carbon deposits.

Adjustment of shock absorbers.

Testing of oil filter.

Experts Study N. Y. Streets from Plane

Traffic experts conducted a thorough study of the highways of New York City from an airplane. They were particularly impressed by the crooked, narrow streets of Manhattan and the great number of traffic bottle necks formed at places all over the city. They decided that traffic congestion would be greatly relieved if some way could be found to overcome the motorists' "sheep instinct" or tendency to herd in certain avenues.

29-Story Garage Planned in Chicago

Two skyscraping motor hotels de luxe, each claimed to be taller than any other garage in the world, are planned in Chicago, Ill. One will be 29 stories and afford a resting place during the day for 1,300 weary motors. The other will have 28 floors where 432 automobiles may relax for a few hours after the strenuous effort of rushing 432 impatient owners from home to office.

Tool Handles Blister Hands When Painted

Don't obey the impulse to give the screwdriver handle a coat of gaudy, or any other kind of paint. It is more likely to blister the hands of the user, strange as that may seem.

Fourth for July And 7 Months, Oldsmobile Rank

"FOURTH in new car registrations in Allegheny County for the month of July and also for the first seven months of this year, tells the story of the popular acceptance of Oldsmobile cars by the motoring public here," states C. L. Day, of the Oldsmobile Pittsburgh Company, distributor for the Oldsmobile and Viking Eight.

"The great increase in popularity of the Oldsmobile cars is further indicated in the fact that more of our cars were registered during the first seven months of 1929 than in all 12 months of 1928," continued Mr. Day. "This increase in registration indicates that the number of registrations for this year will be 52 per cent in excess of those for last year. Our cars were exceeded in registrations only by cars of a lower price range."

DRIVER CHAINED TO PLYMOUTH

From Los Angeles to Detroit, chained to the steering wheel of a Plymouth roadster, in 86 hours and 7 minutes driving time, is the unique record of Harry Smith, of Los Angeles, who recently arrived in Detroit none the worse for his grueling grind of 2,735 miles.

The entire trip was accomplished without a mishap, and is claimed as a record between the two cities for cars in the Plymouth's class. The average speed was better than 32 miles an hour. Exceptional gasoline economy was recorded, only 131 gallons being used, averaging almost 21 miles to the gallon. Just six quarts of oil were required. The trip was made by way of Salt Lake City, Cheyenne and Omaha.

Mr. Smith, formerly sales manager for the Plymouth dealer in Los Angeles, and a great Plymouth enthusiast, decided to call on factory officials in Detroit. He used his dependable Plymouth car to make the trip in a most unique manner—chained to the steering column by leg irons. The key to the manacles was sent by air mail to Detroit police after the irons were locked by Capt. A. W. Gifford, head of the Los Angeles traffic squad. WeWsWtern Union telegraph officials checked the time.

$50,000,000 Saved By Rubber Study

AKRON, O., Aug. 3.—A staggering total of $50,000,000 annually is the estimate placed on the saving to the rubber consuming public through the development of age resisters by the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company. This estimate was made by the committee on Recent Economic Changes, formed under the administration of President Coolidge. President Hoover, then secretary of commerce, was chairman.

The development of age resisters by Goodrich is the result of many years of experiment by the chemical research department, President James D. Tew said when asked about the working of this outstanding economy in rubber goods. Rubber was subject to greater oxidation or premature destruction before the discovery of anti-oxidants, Mr. Tew said. The effect of light and heat was to cause checking and cracking, or a continuation of the vulcanizing process which destroyed the vitality of rubber products. Many more miles have been added to tires and much longer life to other rubber products through this Goodrich process.

Germany Gives U. S. Autoists Licenses

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—Under a special order just issued by the minister of traffic, American motorists who have been in possession for at least one year of a driver's license in their home state can obtain a special license valid for Germany. All that is required is that they obtain from a police official who himself holds a German license, or from an officially recognized expert of the University of Technology, a certificate to the effect that the applicant is acquainted with the main German traffic regulations for automobiles. This certificate, together with the applicant's own license, entitles the motorist to receive a German license.

Highway Research Board to Meet

The ninth annual meeting of the Highway Research Board will be held on December 12 and 13, 1929, in Washington, D. C. An important feature will be the presentation of progress reports upon the comprehensive program of highway research now in preparation by the board.

Exhaust Valves Show Trouble Sign First

When there is evidence of valve trouble, the motor car owner should know that the exhaust valves are to be suspected first. They suffer more wear than the intake valves because they operate at a very high temperature.

Baggage o nRear Slips Over to Left

Baggage tied to the rear of the car will work over to the left because of the fact that the car travels on the right hand side of the road and makes turns more sharply to the right then to the left.

Heavy Grease Used To Find Lost Nuts

Recovering a recalcitrant nut or bolt that has dropped into the drip pan usually is a job that calls for a magnet. There is a cheap substitute that will work in case the missing unit is not too heavy. Put a blob of fairly heavy grease on the end of a screwdriver or piece of wire and go fishing for the missing nut.

DE SOTO STOCK CAR WINS RACE

In a 100-mile "free-for-all" stock car race June 9 over the dirt oval at Wichita Falls, Tex., a De Soto Six roadster, owned by Walter E. Routt, of Houston, won first place in a long line of entries, the De Soto Motor Corporation has informed Kilroy Motors, Inc., Pittsburgh distributor. B. D. Williams, who drove for Routt, kept his machine in sixth place until the one hundred and ninetieth lap. Then with a sudden burst of speed the De Soto forged ahead and by the time the one hundred and ninety-seventh lap was reached he was in first place. Three laps later, at the end of the race, he was 300 yards in front. The time for the 100 miles was 2 hours 8 minutes and 13 seconds—five minutes faster than the record made in 1928.

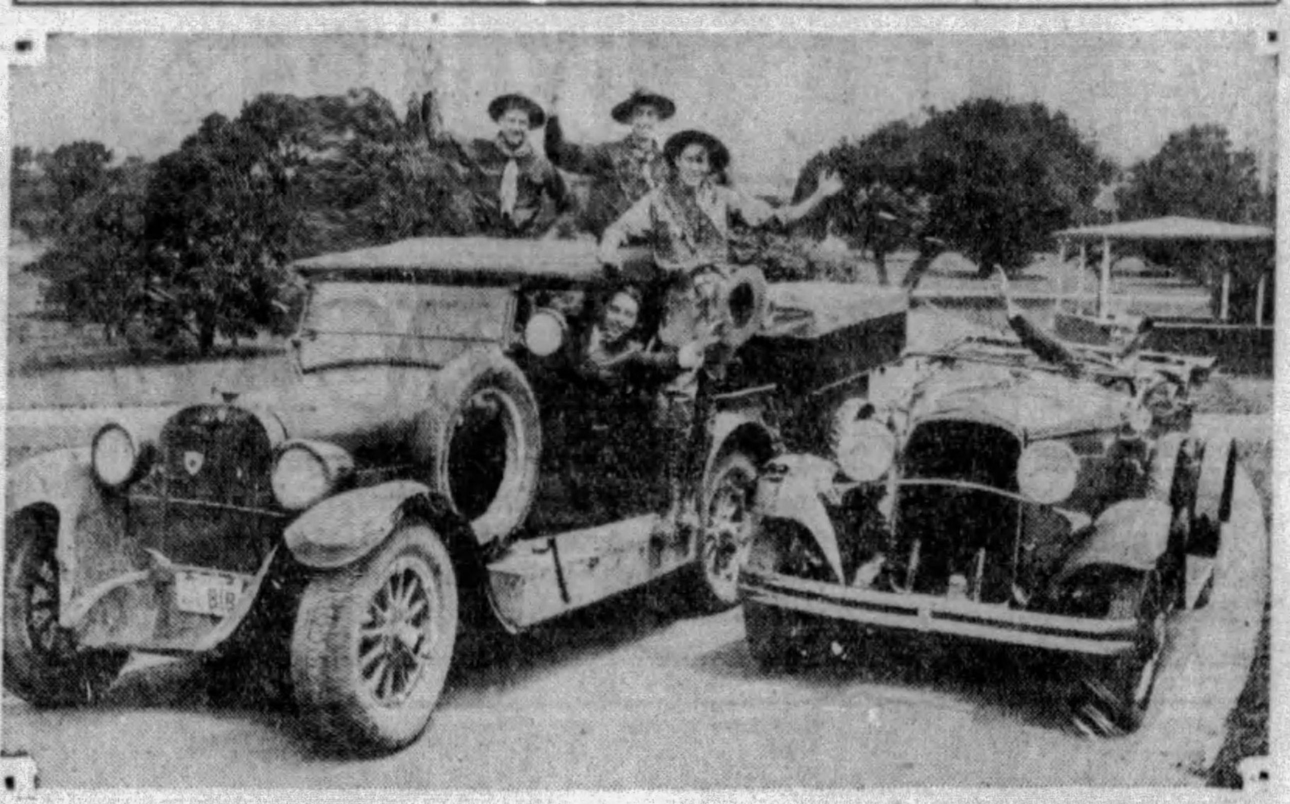
The same car won first place and set a new record for the Bellaire track at Houston in a 15-mile race May 7. Williams, again at the wheel, covered the distance in 13 minutes 45 seconds—two-fifth seconds faster than the time for the winner of a race for cars in the "more-than-$1,000" class run the same day.

Five days later this roadster set a new record for stock models on a dirt track. During the time trials the De Soto finished the 1¼ miles in 1 minute and 13 second, faster than the previous record by two seconds.

Road Improvement In Forest County

Forest County will gain 8.8 miles of improved road through the Wheeler-Flynn act allocation of $389,410.90 to the county, Secretary of Highways James Lyall Stuart said today. The preferences expressed by the Forest County Commissioners are: Traffic Route No. 327, intersection of Route No. 66, through West Hickory, 0.8 miles, and Traffic Route No. 68, from end of present construction south of Marienville to Clarion County line.

SCOUTS TOURING NATIONAL PARKS



IN ELEVEN STATES—These three Boy Scouts were picked from 600 to tour the Western national park system this summer. The boys started from Oakland, Cal., and will visit parks in 11 Western states. At the wheel of the veteran Dodge car which has covered more than 75,000 miles, is Ansel Hall, chief naturalist for the Western division of national parks. A New Dodge Brothers Six roadster is starting the boys on their way.

Big Road Program For New England

BOSTON, Aug. 3.—As further evidence of New England's economic strength and progress, the New England Council, all-New England development organization, today called attention to the fact that the six New England states will spend in 1929 more than fifty-one million dollars for hard surface road construction. A survey made by the council shows a minimum total of $51,297,000 is already authorized for expenditure this season. A total of 658 mles of new hard surface roads will be construited, and many more miles of highways will be reconstructed or resurfaced.

Butter Removes Tar From Auto in Pinch

When the finish of the car becomes flecked with tar, as it often does, there are a number of special preparations that will cleanse it. Even butter will do the job if it is the handiest at the moment.

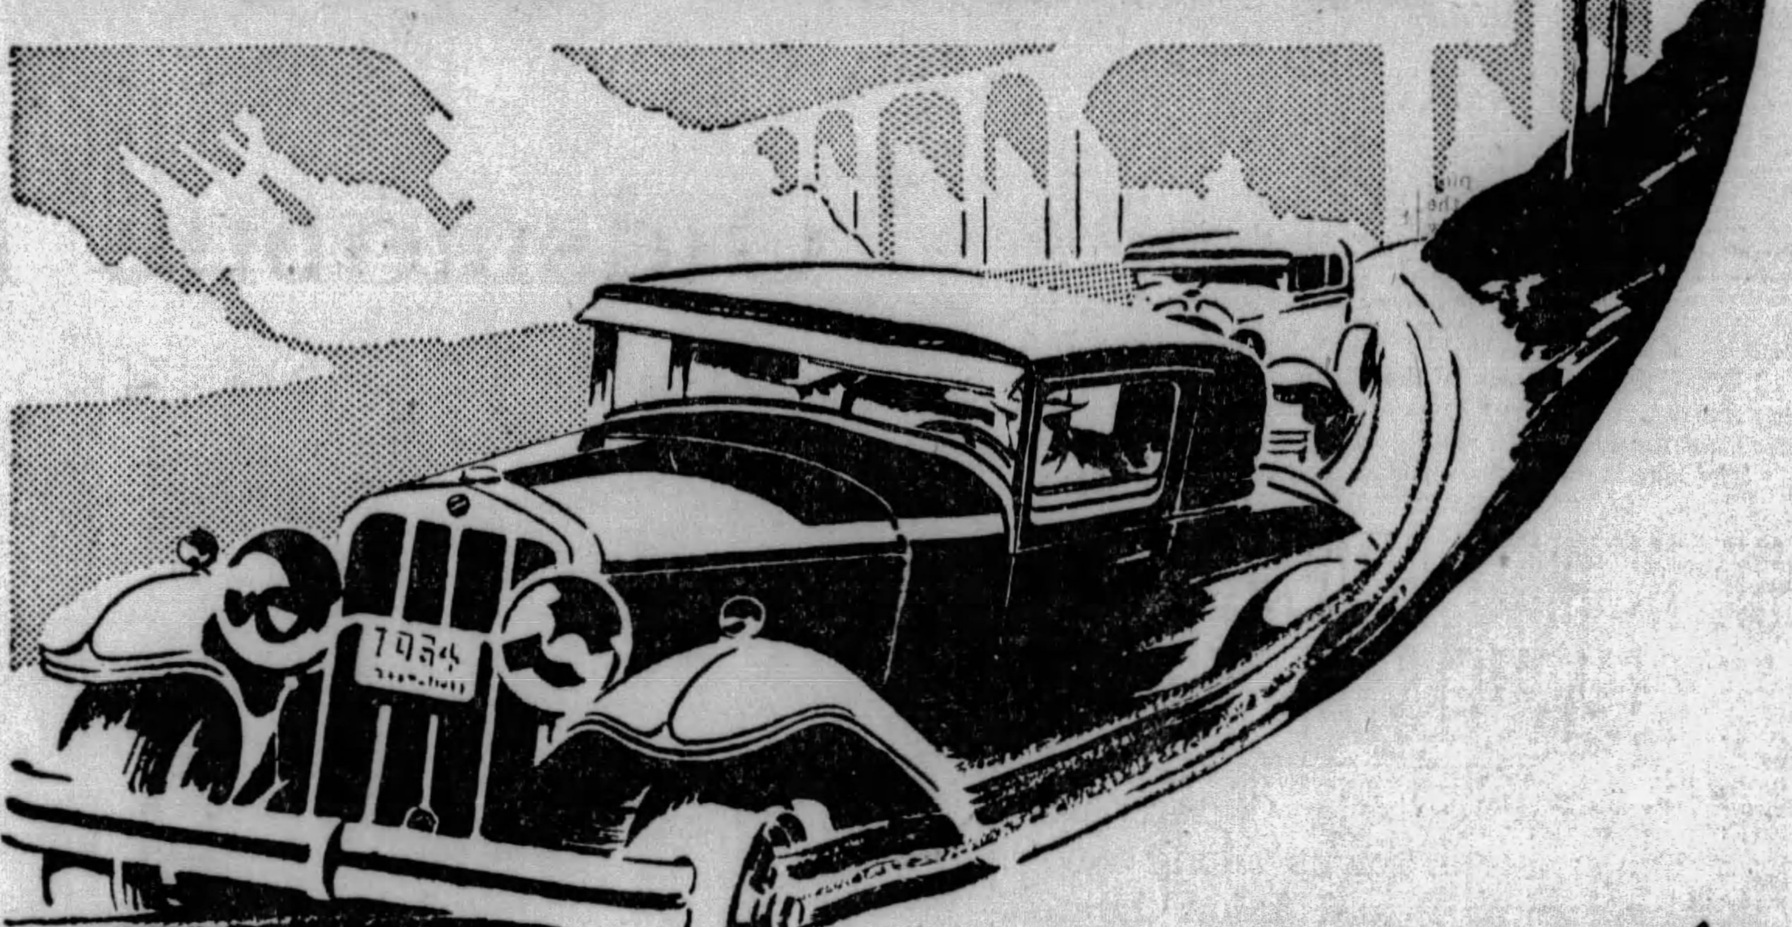
Top Radiator Hose Affected by Heat

Watch the upper radiator hose connection. It gives out first because it carries hotter water than the lower hose connection, and hotter water is more destructive in its effects on hose lining.

New Autos in Year Worth 3 Billions

Keeping the nation supplied with new automobiles and replacing wornout parts on cars already in service adds almost $5,000,000,000 a year to America's production of wealth. The wholesale value of the 4,630,000 new automobiles produced in the United States in 1928 is estimated at $3,045,820,000. In addition, replacements parts, tires, accessories and service equipment accounted for a value of more than $1,600,000,000.

CUT CRESCENTS AROUND CARS AT 50



with FRANKLIN'S 40% MORE AIR-COOLED POWER

Air-cooled power is different! With the amazing performance of Franklin—which is 40% more powerful than last year—and the largest power increase of any present-day car—you gain an entirely new motoring experience.

Experience the AIRPLANE FEEL

When you drive the Franklin you never wonder whether you can do this or that—you know you can. Zoom the hills. Pass in a pinch. Whirl down the winding highway at fast pace with perfect confidence. Drive all day at top speed without danger of overheating or injury to the engine or loss of power. Rapidly accelerate to 50 miles an hour in second gear, as quietly as in high.

Franklin is America's most modern car. It has the air-cooled motor—the power plant of that newer generation which travels the pathway of the skies. Franklin is the ONE car that has been able to capture all major road records. It is this record-breaking performance that means so much to everyday driving. In traffic you dart ahead at the green—on the open road you're ahead of the parade. Drive this smart car. See for yourself—Franklin performance is incomparable.

DRIVERS SMOKE CAUSE TROUBLE; WARNING GIVEN

Motor Federation Leader Advises Against Accidents Due to Careless Operation.

HARRISBURG, Aug. 3.—Dropping ashes on the floor may be taboo at home, but in the car it's a safer policy than snuffing them out the window, unless you can do so in such a manner that there is no doubt as to your intentions," S. Edward Gable, president of the Pennsylvania Motor Federation, said today in cautioning drivers against failure to give clear and concise signals.

"The acceleration, the speed and the congestion of our present-day traffic," Mr. Gable stated, "has reached the point where the utmost concentration is necessary to assure safe travel. Drivers must keep their thoughts upon the operation of the car, and it is the duty of all to make certain that they are not responsible for distracting the attention of other drivers without due cause.

"The motorist who smokes while at the wheel inadvertently is responsible for confusion from time to time that causes accidents. An arm outstretched through the window of the car ahead should be nothing other than a signal to those following, but often it happens to be the driver thoughtlessly snuffing ashes from a cigar or cigaret. If it happens, as it sometimes does, that this same motorist, after confusing drivers in the rear on several occasions with the flicking of ashes, stretches out his arm to signal a left turn or a stop, there usually is trouble. Accustomed to seeing the arm outstretched merely for the snuffing of ashes, the driver of the car following naturally mistakes the turn or stop signal for just another flicking of ashes and a crash or near crash results."

Mr. Gable urged motorists at all times to give the other driver the benefit of the doubt. "Be a sportsman—be courteous and thoughtful," he advised. "Give your signals in a distinct and clear manner. By practicing two cardinal virtues of motor vehicle operation—thoughtfulness and courtesy—you will be doing your share towards alleviating the dangers of modern traffic conditions and adding to the safety of yourself, your family, your friends and your fellow men."

Spark Plug Advance Shown in Test Run

Evidence of the remarkable advance the last few years have witnessed in design and construction of spark plugs is seen by Champion Spark Plug Company officials in the unprecedented feat of the new Roosevelt straight eight car which established a new all-time record in its non-stop endurance run of 440 hours and 30 minutes on the Indianapolis Speedway. All Roosevelt cars carry Champions as standard equipment.

It is a coincidence worth noting that the Roosevelt's run was made on the Indianapolis Speedway. That track was also the scene of the modern spark plug's first demonstration of its immense superiority over its predecessors. In the Memorial Day race at Indianapolis six years ago cars for the first time were able to complete the 500-mile course without changing spark plugs. Before that time set after set would give out under the strain of the furious driving, but progress in designing and construction contributed the modern type of plug that year and revolutionized the entire racing game.

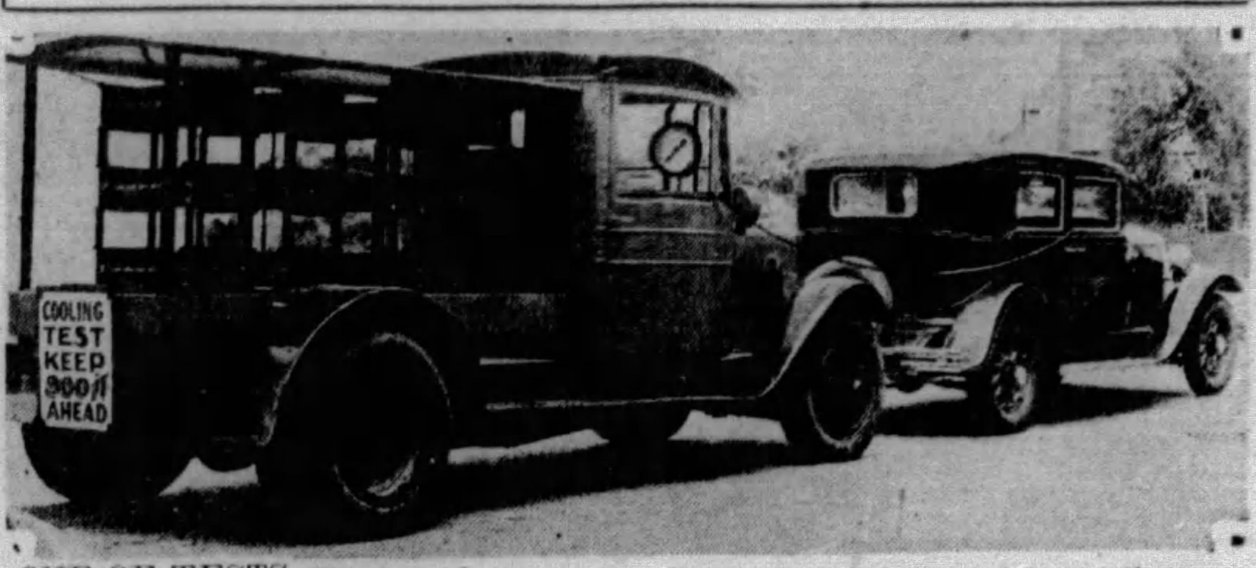
All-Steel Bodies Make Safest Autos

The safest automobiles today are the ones equipped with all-steel bodies and painted in bright colors. The bright colors are safer because they can be seen from a greater distance and because they attract more attention. The use of all-steel, of course, has proven a greater adjunct to traffic safety than any other recent development in automobiles, with the possible exception of the four-wheel brakes.

Franklin Factory In Record Turnout

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 3.—Following a record business for the first six months of the current year, indications are that profits of the Franklin Automobile Company, builders of the Franklin line of air-cooled cars, will amount to approximately $1,250,000 net, after taxes. With provisions made for preferred dividends, there remains $3.50 per comman share for the period.

MAKING HILLS OF LEVEL ROADS



ONE OF TESTS—Towing dynameter equipped with electrical resistance to increase pull, used at the General Motors Proving ground in testing the cooling system and pulling capacity of the new Viking Eight, companion car to Oldsmobile Six.

VIKINGS TESTED BY NEW DEVICE

If it were possible to build a road from the lowest depth in the oceans to the peak of the highest mountain in the world, would it be possible for an automobile to drive up this grade, an elevation of nearly 12 miles, without overheating?

While such a road is an impossibility, yet the engineers who designed and perfected the Viking, the new V type, eight cylinder companion car to the Oldsmobile Six, are able to give an authoritative answer to the question. The engineers were enabled to obtain this accurate knowledge through the use of the new towing dynamometer at the General Motors Proving Ground, one of the many testing devices utilized in perfecting the Viking.

By means of the towing dynamometer, engineers can approximate on a level road the pulling effort and effect of an automobile climbing varying grades or running through heavy sand. And they can keep up this test hour after hour without cessation until the ultimate of car performance in this respect has been definitely established.

The towing dynamometer is a truck equipped with specially devised electrical apparatus whereby a load may be held constant or varied at the wishes of the operator.

Peru Holds Tests For Auto Drivers

Applicants for automobile driving permits in Peru will be subject to a complete psycho-physical examination, Commercial Attache O. C. Townsend, Lima, reports to the Department of Commerce.

A new laboratory will be established in Lima with all the required modern scientific instruments to make the required tests.

Persons already driving automobiles will also be subject to such examinations once every six months in order to ascertain that their original qualifications are maintained.

The requirements were suggested in an effort to stop the increased traffic accidents.

Loose Bolts Often Cause of Vibration

When troubled with vibration in a car, see that the bolts holding the engine-clutch-transmission unit to the frace are all perfectly tight. Sometimes the fan is out of balance, due to the bending of its blades. On account of leakage of gas, one of the cylinders will give weaker impulses than the others. Careful inspection should be made in order that there is nothing about the car that is loose and can thus be set shaking so as to exaggerate the engine vibration. A bent driving shaft, misalignment of wheels, loose top and many other things may make a car vibrate.

Grease for Bearings On Wheel Necessary

Wheel bearings must not be permitted to run dry and neglect in this respect will give the automobile owner much trouble. There comes the time when the old and stale grease should be removed from the bearing, the bearing cleaned in gasoline, checked for wear and repacked with fresh lubricant.

Use Brake Pressure Driving in Water

A slight pressure maintained upon brakes of the external contracting type, while driving through water, will assist in keeping the lining from becoming water soaked, a condition which greatly reduces the efficiency of the brakes, states L. G. Evans, general service manager for the National Automobile Club.

WATCH CHILDREN

Never permit children to play in or around the car.

SHORTENS TIRE LIFE

Negligence will shorten the life of the best tire.

CHEVROLET SIX LINE INCREASED

DETROIT, Aug. 3.—Chevrolet division, General Motors Corporation, has announced two new closed models have been added to its six-cylinder passenger car line, the imperial sedan and the sport coupe. This brings Chevrolet's line to five closed and two open models.

Introduction of these two models comes simultaneously with the announcement that more than 950,000 new Chevrolets have been delivered to consumers. Chevrolet factories, it is reported, are operating on biggest summer production level in history of the company.

'Wandering' of New Car Soon Vanishes

A sensation of "wandering" in the steering of a new car is usually due to stiffness of the steering assembly and will disappear as the machine is broken in.

A NEW IDEA IN AUTO FASHIONS

ACCLAIMED—Thousands of Pittsburghers throughout the last week have greeted the new 1930 Buick line as a criterian of future motor car styling. A more powerful motor, longer wheelbase and a lower and more beautiful body feature this coupe model. There are 14 models and three series in the new line of Buick cars.

Lakes and Memorials Visited on Tour Into Ohio

School, one of the finest structures of its kind in the country. Canton also is an important industrial center, having one of the largest brick plants and safe and vault works.

Cleveland avenue, one square to the left of Market avenue, is the avenue of travel from Canton. It leads to Ohio State Route 8, which is followed northward to Akron. Just at the entrance to the latter town Springfield Lake, a tourist and picnic resort, is passed to the left. Just over the lake can be seen the steel skeleton work for the new dirigible hangar being constructed at the Akron airport.

RUBBER TOWN

Akron is known as "the town that tires the world," for there are manufactured more tires and other rubber products than in any other city. Gen. Simon Perkins, veteran of the War of 1812, laid out the city in 1825 along the old Ohio-Pennsylvania Canal. It was to Dr. Benjamin Franklin Goodrich, who started the first rubber factory there in 1871, that Akron owes its present fame as the center of the world rubber goods production. Now the Goodrich, Goodyear, Firestone, General, Seiberling, India, Swinehart, Mohawk, American-Akron and Falls rubber companies have enormous factories there. Akron also is noted as a milling center and for its brick and tile industry.

Entrance to Akron is over East Market street. For those who desire to visit the great Akron airport a left turn should be made on South Arlington street, which is Ohio Route 241, and also known as the Massillon road. Returning by Wingfoot Lake and through the towns of Suffield, Randolph and Atwater to Deerfield, where a right turn is made to Route 14 for a run into Salem, another of Ohio's well-known towns. From Salem Route 14 is followed through Columbiana to the state line, where Pennsylvania Route 51 is followed through Beaver Falls, Fallston, Beaver and Rochester to Monaca. The same highway is followed to the traffic light in New Sheffield, the first from Monaca. A left turn is made there for a run through Woodlawn, followed by a right turn at the railroad station. The road from that point follows the Ohio River to the city, through Coraopolis, Neville Island and McKees Rocks.

4th PLACE AMONG ALL CARS FOR JUNE and JULY

Oldsmobile Registrations for 1929 in Pittsburgh and Allegheny County are 62% greater than for 1928

. . and Oldsmobile stands in fourth place among all cars for 1929

IN 1928 Oldsmobile registrations in Allegheny County gained 95% over those for 1927. And now . . . continuing Oldsmobile's phenomenal rise in Pittsburgh popularity . . . 1929 demand shows a further increase of 62% over the record-breaking level of 1928.

During June and July Oldsmobile reached a new high point in public acceptance in Pittsburgh . . . standing in fourth place among all cars. And among all cars, Oldsmobile stands in fourth place for the year 1929 to date in the preference of residents of Pittsburgh and vicinity.

During the first seven months of 1929, 1127 Oldsmobiles were delivered—a greater number than during the entire year of 1928, when 1110 deliveries were made.

The true measure of Oldsmobile value is best reflected by Oldsmobile's popularity among discriminating buyers.

Month after month, Oldsmobile continues to win greater and greater public acceptance in Pittsburgh—in Allegheny County—and throughout America.

And as the circle of Oldsmobile owners grows, more and more people are hearing the actual experiences of their friends who own Oldsmobiles—of the satisfaction and gratification of Oldsmobile ownership.

Motor car buyers are swinging to Oldsmobile in ever-increasing numbers, because they find by actual comparison, that no other car in the market offers such a remarkable combination of beauty, luxury, and fine performance at Oldsmobile's low price.

Come in and see this car. Know the beauty of its sturdy Bodies by Fisher. Get behind the wheel and enjoy the comfort of wide, deep-cushioned seats and roomy, luxuriously appointed interiors.

Take it out and drive it. Test the speed, power, and getaway of Oldsmobile's big 62 horse-power high-compression engine. Know the pleasure of finger-tip steering, of superb roadability, and of the restful riding comfort that results from four Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers and special alloy-steel springs.

Go over this fine Oldsmobile, feature by feature. Compare it, point by point, with other cars. And you will discover, as thousands already have, that you can't match its value at or near its price.

The VIKING

—the new 90-degree V-type Eight at medium price—is built in the Olds factories, by Oldsmobile craftsmen, and sold through Oldsmobile dealers. At $1595 for all models, f. o. b. factory, Lansing, Michigan, it is as outstanding in value in its field as the popular Oldsmobile Six, the fine car of low price.

Rules of the Road and the Motor Code

(Hundreds of queries are received daily by the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, at Harrisburg, relating to road rules and the Motor Code. In the belief that the questions and their answers will solve problems which puzzle motorists in general, Commissioner Benjamin G. Eynon, of the Motor Vehicles Bureau, will present a number of them in the Sun-Telegraph each week. The information herein contained, is, of course, official.)

Q. Why should I be compelled to have my car examined? In the papers I see that compulsory examinations must be made between October 1 and November 15. This is impossible so far as I am concerned because my machine is gone over regularly by a mechanic.

A. What you say being true, the compulsary examination should not be a hardship. The reason the Legislature asked this law is because a great many owners of motor cars persist in neglecting them, as a result there are accidents because the important parts of machinery fail at a critical moment. To neglect a motor car is an offense of omission.

Q. I have lost my owner's license card and ask that you send another to me.

A. Before we can forward a duplicate registration card, you must make application on our form No. 109, giving the description of your motor vehicle, and submit to the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, Harrisburg, with a fee of 50 cents. This should include the make and manufacturer's numbers, and the number of your 1929 registration plates.

Q. I should like my garage to be made an official examining station during the compulsory inspection period.

A. Application forms will be mailed to those who were appointed as official inspection stations for the campaign which was conducted in April of 1928 and on receipt of the applications in this bureau, investigation will be conducted by the members of the highway patrol and the official stations appointed on the recommendation of the patrolman who makes the examination. If your garage was not an official inspection station in April, 1928, you should communicate with the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, Harrisburg, requesting an application form.

Q. Is it legal to deduct 1 per cent from all Gasoline Tax paid; this allowance being made for evaporation and shrinkage when gasoline is put into the ground?

A. There is no allowance for shrinkage of gasoline.

Q. I want to transfer the title of an automobile, but I am unable to find the former owner, who has left the country. What shall I do?

A. When a motor vehicle is purchased and it is absolutely impossible for the purchaser to locate the prior owner, we can only suggest that the former consult an attorney as to how to obtain indisputable ownership of the vehicle through operation of the law.

Q. Although I have been driving a motor car for 13 years, I recently saw a copy of the Motor Code for the first time, and discovered that I probably do not have the hearing required by law. I should like to know whether I am qualified, or whether I shall surrender my operator's license?

A. We suggest that you have a doctor examine you, and if your hearing is 2 per centum of normal, as required by the Motor Vehicle Code, the operator's license will be approved.

Q. I own a sedan and work some distance from my home. May I carry passengers to the same mill and charge them for the service, or if I do not make a regular charge, is it all right for me to have a private understanding covering the remuneration?

A. A person operating a passenger vehicle may carry people to work, but a fee cannot be charged unless a Certificate of Public Convenience is held by the owner of the vehicle. We advise you to communicate with the Public Service Commission, Harrisburg.

Q. A Justice of the Peace levied a fine and cost of $13.50 against my boy friend. This was an unreasonable, unjust action. How can my friend recover the money?

A. This Bureau has no jurisdiction over fines levied by the minor judiciary. Inasmuch as you desire redress, we suggest that you consult a lawyer.

Q. Will you give me the name of a bonding company which will handle my bond as a gasoline vender?

A. This Bureau is unable to furnish you with the names of bonding companies. However, only Corporate Surety Bonds of a company licensed to do business in Pennsylvania will be accepted.

Q. Did the recent Legislature pass a law making hitch-hiking illegal?

A. As introduced early in the session, the Motor Code contained such a provision, but it was taken out, and there is now no provision against the practice you mention.

Q. We have discontinued handling gasoline as a dealer and will handle it in the future as a consumer. The tax will be paid to the refining company from whom we purchase the gasoline. The only gasoline that will be used from our supply other than that for our own cars, will be that used by some of our employes, and deductions will be made from their pay checks.

A. Since you purchase gasoline only for your own use and a four cent (4c) tax is paid to the person from whom it is purchased, it will not be necessary for you to procure a Liquid Fuel Permit, nor to file any bond with this department. If your purchase of gasoline is made from a company outside of Pennsylvania it will be necessary for you to have a Liquid Fuel Permit and pay tax to the Pennsylvania Department of Revenue.

Q. Being a newcomer in Pennsylvania, I write to inquire why I am required to have a Certificate of Title for my automobile, and what the purpose of this title is.

A. First, because the Pennsylvania Vehicle Code, which is the state's motor law, prohibits any resident from owning a motor vehicle unless a certificate of title shall have been obtained, and this title is a pre-requisite to registration or the issue of license plates. Second, the certificate of title is in effect a deed to a piece of property, and motor vehicles may not be bought, sold, or ownership in them transferred, without the assignment and passage of the title. The title therefore constitutes a protection against the purchase of stolen cars, and since all titles are recorded in the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, if your car is stolen and the theft reported to us, it cannot be disposed of nor registered in Pennsylvania until the title is clear. All applications of this nature are first checked against the title records before being considered, and we believe that when a similar law is effective throughout the United States, automobile thefts will be reduced to a minimum. A title law does not necessarily decrease thefts, but it does limit the market for stolen cars which brings about virtually the same result.

Q.—Does a Justice of the Peace have authority to dismiss a case in which the evidence presented is not sufficient to impose a fine?

A.—Certainly.

Q.—We are selling a customer a new car. In applying for a title for it he wishes to add his wife's name to the title, and transfer his present tags to the new car. Can this be done?

A.—Registration plates cannot be transferred from person to person; only from car to car titled in the same name. Your customer's old plates will not be valid on the new car.

Education Is Needed To Reduce Accidents

EDUCATION, much of which must of necessity be of the self-administered type, is badly needed to improve the type of driving of a large number of motorists who do not feel themselves either dangerous operators or regular violators of the law.

It is the careless driver and the driver who, through lack of observance and judgment, is guilty of dangerous miscalculations in the operation of a car who contributes the majority of the accidents daily on the highways of the nation.

A recent survey of a comprehensive and representative type shows that failure to give the right of way leads as a cause of accidents. At the same time this survey shows miscalculation on the part of the operators to come next, with inattention as a close third in accident causation.

When it is taken into consideration that right-of-way cases are in many instances due to miscalculation and inattention, it will be seen what a tremendous toll of accidents result from these two causes.

Inattention is only another term for carelessness in a great many instances. At the same time, miscalculation is often a form of carelessness if not making an honest effort in learning to judge distances, traffic hazards, etc. In view of these facts, it is obvious that drivers who are not at heart potential criminals are responsible for a vast majority of the accidents occurring daily on the highways of the country. The criminal driver is found to be in a minor percentage and can be handled much more easily than the unintentional offender, who is just as dangerous and contributes the major portion of accidents, deaths and damages.

Banishing of 'Bugs' From Cars Achieved

THERE used to be a lot of prejudice in the public mind about buying a new type car. It was believed the manufacturers were in the habit of "experimenting" on the consumer and that in consequence only a car in the second or third year of manufacture could be really dependable.

Now the manufacturer does his experimenting in advance and the new car is really a finished product when it goes on the market. The public still pays for manufacturers' experiments, but he does not perform them himself; that is the difference.

Leading manufacturers now have their test work organized on a systematic and very efficient basis. General Motors' proving ground, for instance, where more than 4,000,000 miles of test runs were made last year, estimates that the upkeep of that remarkable plant adds six cents to the sale price of the cars.

RIMES of the ROAD
by Dudley Glass

THE HANDY CHAP

I OWNED a trusty little car which never let me down;
Six days a week, 12 months a year,
it took me into town.
I kept it oiled and full of gas, according to the rules,
But one day Aleck Brown came by
. . . a handy chap with tools.

That Sunday morn I'd washed the car and changed the crankcase oil,
When Brown came strolling up the drive and watched me at my toil.
"Let's hear her run," said Brown. "Oh, say, you ought to fix that quick.
"She's giving out quite too much smoke. Your mixture is too thick."

He turned the carburetor once and listened to her cough.
"Her timing's bad," he said, and then, "Your spark is somewhat off.
"Just let me have that monkey wrench, and open up her hood;
"Five minutes' work and knowing how will have her running good."

My dear old car is in the shop with some mysterious ill;
To find what's wrong has been a task to test an expert's skill.
The boss mechanic may be right: he says the greatest fools
Are those who trust their cars to friends . . . those handy guys with tools.

ALONG AUTO ROW
by H. W. DIETRICH, Automobile Editor

AUTOMOBILE registration figures for Allegheny county for the month of June indicate there is much prosperity here. During that month there were 21 per cent more new cars registered than during the same month last year. These figures are slightly lower than those for the first six months, which are 39 per cent in excess of those for the same period of 1928.

MANUFACTURERS of automotive parts and accessories have ended the first half of the year with business substantially ahead of any previous six months' period in the history of the industry, and as the third quarter gets under way operations continue well ahead of the same period in previous years. Production in June showed a moderate seasonal decline from May, as was expected.

Favorable business, probably ahead of last year, is expected for the third quarter. Manufacturers of parts and accessories for original equipment of cars and trucks, and service parts and service equipment for the wholesale trade shared this large gain in business. The large increase in the number of automobiles in use in this country and abroad has caused supplies of units and parts to maintain unusually heavy schedules.

THE automotive division of the Department of Commerce last week announced that the world production of automotive vehicles in 1928 established a new all-time record at 5,203,139, an increase of more than a million units over 1927. The United States and Canadian share of the increase was more than 88 per cent. Fifty-five per cent of the total production was for replacements, the announcement stated.

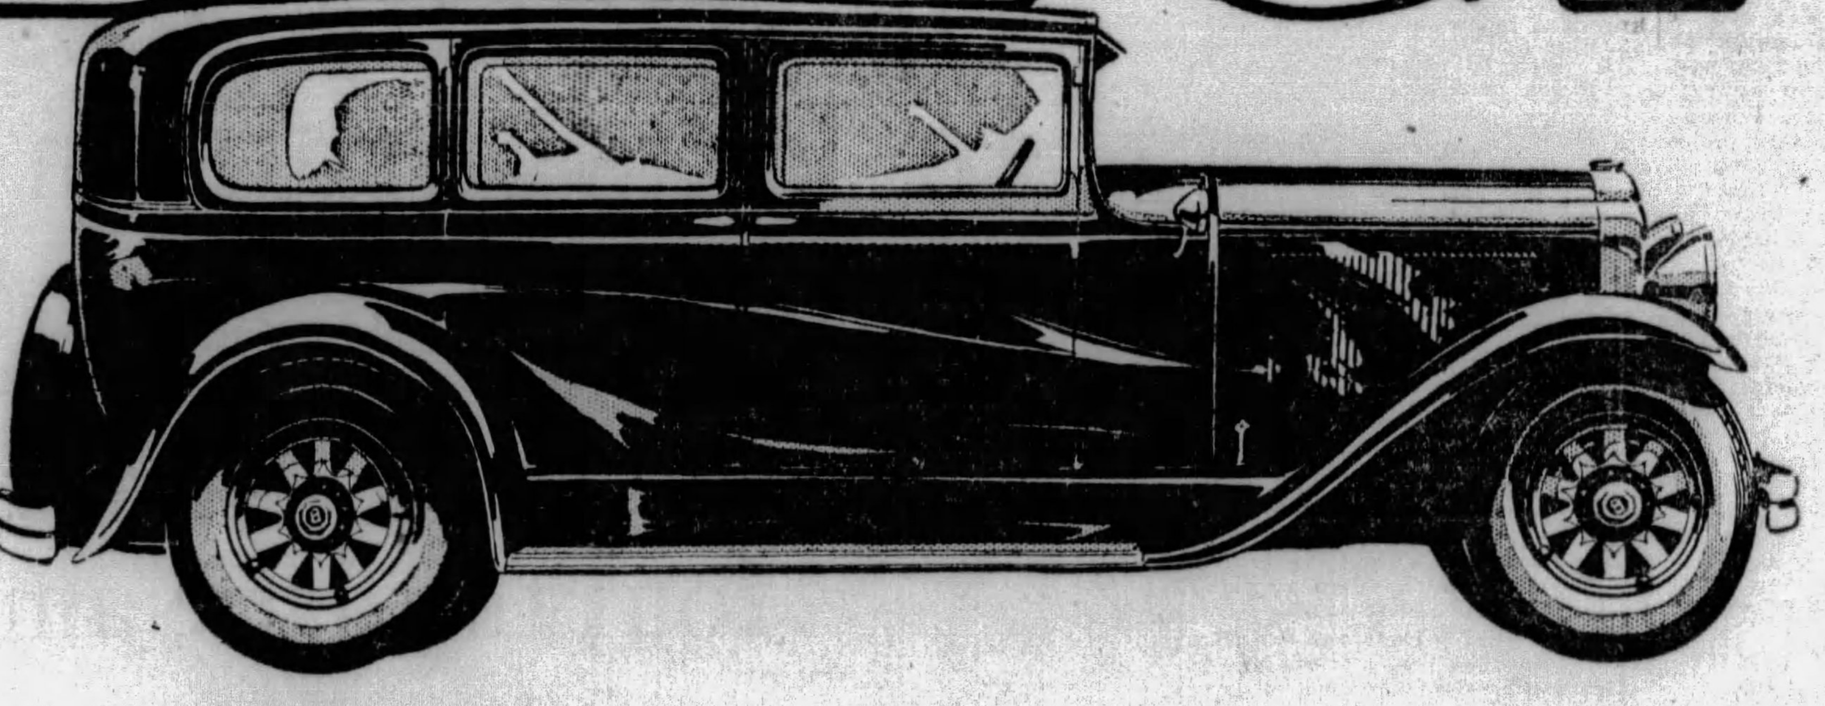
UPON his return from a survey of business conditions throughout the East, Holm Walker, vice president and sales chief of the Windsor Corporation, announced that business in general is in a healthy condition, particularly with reference to the automotive industry. While on this trip, Mr. Walker took the opportunity to make the acquaintance of the many new dealers that have joined the Windsor family since his last trip east, several weeks ago.

The new dealers, as well as the public, are enthusiastically receiving the Windsor White Prince, especially since the addition of the 120-inch wheelbase 6-69 model, which is in the popular priced class. There are enough future orders now on hand at the Windsor factory to keep them on a full production schedule for some time.

THE New BUICK



New FISHER styling

in the most colorful and captivating motor car bodies of the year . . . .

Reflecting the matchless genius of Fisher's artist-craftsmen, as well as the unparalleled resources of the Buick and Fisher organizations, the magnificent new Buick Bodies by Fisher incorporate beauty and charm obviously superior to any other car in the Buick field.

Buick's new bodies are longer—lower—more luxurious. They reveal entirely new harmony of color and grace of line. They are replete with extra features of utility, luxury and convenience, including new Non-Glare Windshield for safe night driving—new and richer upholstery—new fittings and appointments of princely luxury—as well as the adjustable front seat and many other advantages of Fisher design.

And, in addition to these unrivaled beauty and luxury features, this new Buick embodies other wonderful new elements of value. Such value is expressed in a new and mightier valve-in-head engine lending new brilliance to every phase of Buick performance—in new Controlled Servo Enclosed Brakes, unmatched for smooth, positive action—in four new double-acting Lovejoy Duodraulic Shock Absorbers, new longer rear springs, assuring superlative riding comfort over any road at any speed—in new frictionless steering gear and new Steering Shock Eliminator, achieving the easiest steering in the world.

And what is more, this new Buick with all of these vital superiorities, is offered at new low prices—prices that make Buick for 1930 the greatest value Buick has ever offered in 26 years of building extra value into each series of Buick cars. Compare what this new Buick offers. Every comparison will definitely establish it as the world's greatest motor car value.

TRAVEL and RESORT INFORMATION

PLAYGROUNDS OF FAR NORTH WIN TOURISTS

Nova Scotia, Newfoundland Have Picturesque Scenes; Forests Refuges for Game.

The natural playgrounds of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are calling to many residents of the United States to come and spend a summer season along the picturesque shore, in the depths of the forests or beside the clear lakes and streams.

The natural attractions of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are drawing to the not-so-far North larger numbers of vacationists, pleasure seekers and lovers of the out-of-doors each succeeding year.

GAME PLENTIFUL

There the virgin forests are refuges for large and small game, the swift rivers, brawling streams and deep lakes are the habitat of seemingly inexhaustible numbers of game fish—the mighty salmon, the fighting trout, big-mouthed bass and the grayling; while the coastal waters seem alive with myriad varieties of fish that test the mettle of the sportsman with rod and line.

If the sportsman tires of fishing he may take up his gun for recreation. The forests are replete with game of many kinds, ranging from the giant moose to woodcock and snipe. Both Nova Scotia and Newfoundland abound in ideal camping sites that will make the nature-lover loth to pack up his kit and leave at the end of his holiday.

The game laws are designed more as a protection against the pot-hunter and the ruthless slaughterer of wild life, than as oppressive measures aimed against the sportsman. They are in fact most encouraging to the tourist sportsman.

St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland, has a population of approximately 50,000. The people are delightfully hospitable, and there are many places in and about the city that arouse the interest and hold the attention of the visitor.

SAND DUNES OF WEST MICHIGAN DRAW VISITORS

Drifting Sands Form Scenic Valleys; Muskegon State Park Popular Outing Spot

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., July 27.—Perhaps one of the most distinctive and alluring natural attractions for visitors in West Michigan, aside from its lakes and streams, are the miles of majestic sand dunes which line the Lake Michigan shore from the Indiana line to Mackinaw City.

MOUNDS FORMED

Through untold centuries the waters of Lake Michigan have washed the sands of the western Michigan shore, purifying them and grinding them fine. And, through these centuries, the prevailing winds, blowing off Lake Michigan from west and southwest and northwest, have drifted the sands into great mounds and ridges and hills, broken with scenic valleys, ravines, "witches' caldrons" and deep "Devils' holes." Grasses, shrubs and trees have slowly gained a foothold in these shifting sands and covered the slopes with greenery. They have turned desert wastes into forests and wildwood tangles. They have created shady retreats in which man can set up his summer home.

1,200 ACRE PARK

Muskegon State Park, just north of Muskegon, 1,200 acres of lake shore hills, valleys, woods, beach and shifting sands, is one of the most popular outing spots in Michigan's duneland. It is the home of the mysterious "creeping dunes," dunes that change their form yearly, or monthly, or even day by day as the awed visitor watches them being shaped as if by unseen hands

More than 21,000 miles of improved roads make the great sand dunes, flashing inland lakes and other scenic attractions of West Michigan easily accessible to motorists. Modern hotels and resorts throughout this vacation land provide every comfort.

Asbury Park Lures Many Vacationists

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 3.—Favored by exceptional weather, this resort has been attracting thousands of vacationists and visitors during the last week. Much interest is being shown in the baby parade, which will take place August 28. This is the thirty-eighth annual national affair, with indications pointing to a larger list of entrants than of previous years.

Social activities are holding the attentions of many of the visitors to the city as well as the colonists of neighboring resorts.

A survey this week showed the resort business of the city to be far ahead of last year. Boardwalk merchants declare business to be greatly in excess of previous years.

Several thousand witnessed the carnival on Deal Lake Wednesday evening, when more than 100 decorated canoes, led by Arthur Pryor and his band, circled around the lake.

Bedford Entertains Saratoga Promoters

BEDFORD SPRINGS, Aug. 3.—William P. Beazell, assistant chairman of the Saratoga Planning Commission, was here this week in confeence with Dr. William E. Fitch, in the matter of the program for making Saratoga a noted spa.

HAMILTON, Bermuda, Aug. 3.—To furnish additional entertainment for its guests Bermuda is now having a new theater built on Reid street. It is hoped that it will be ready in December. Excellent lighting facilities, lighting and ventilation are being planned.

Climbers Are Active In Canadian Rockies

BANFF, Alberta, Aug. 3.—The climbing season in the Canadian Rockies is now in fullest swing, to judge from the number of mountaineering enthusiasts who have been making use of the Swiss guides at Lake Louise. At the Banff Springs Hotel here at present is Kenneth G. Darling, of Cambridge, Mass, who has already made the first ascents of the season at Abbot pass, Mount Temple, and Niblock. Snow conditions have delayed the season somewhat, he said, but they are now excellent.

A 7 Day Houseparty on Inland Seas

BECAUSE everyone knows everyone else aboard ship; because friendships mature rapidly at sea and gaiety and pleasure are the order of the day—this novel holiday is enjoyable as the jolliest houseparty. The giant liners "Noronic", "Hamonic" and "Huronic" sail weekly from Detroit to Duluth and back. You will step ashore at Sarnia, the "Soo", Port Arthur, Fort William and Duluth to sightsee, picnic, golf. Aboard ship there is dancing, both evening and afternoon, mile marches around the decks to give appetites for wonderful meals, a masquerade party the last night at sea and more entertainment than space allows us to mention.

Sailings from Brush Street Dock, Detroit, 11 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

After all = = = everybody is watching CHRYSLER

Rumors about Chrysler's plans are flying thick and fast. The man in the street is saying, "Chrysler has something up its sleeve" = = Widespread gossip insists that Chrysler will soon make an announcement fully as sensational as its dramatic debut of five years ago. Everywhere you hear that Chrysler is going to write another thrilling page of automotive history. The public, which has long expected the unexpected from Chrysler, is waiting in anticipation = = Chrysler greatly appreciates the splendid compliment expressed in this nation-wide belief that something important impends—that whatever Chrysler does is of vital interest and tangible value to the motoring public. It is particularly gratifying right now, in the face of the announcements recently made or promised by other manufacturers, to have American motorists thus reiterate their implicit confidence in Chrysler's ability to stay ahead—and go even farther ahead = = The highest possible tribute to Chrysler prestige is this fact that, after all, everybody is watching Chrysler.

AERO-FAST BUS FIELD ENTERED BY PIERPOINT

Curtiss Planes and Trailer Car Invention in Added Sales and Flying Service.

The automotive and aviation industries were linked in Pittsburgh for the first time on an extensive scale last week with the announcement of the affiliation of the Pierpoint Motor Company with the Aerocar Company of Detroit and the Curtiss Flying Service, Inc. The Pierpoint Motor Company is the distributor for Hudson and Essex motor cars in the Pittsburgh district. It also maintains extensive sales and service quarters at 5001 Baum boulevard.

The Pierpoint Motor Company is celebrating its affiliation with the aviation and advanced motor transport fields with special displays of a model of the Aerocar coach and a sister ship of the St. Louis Robin, a Curtiss plane, which last week completed a 420-hour non-stop flight at St. Louis.

ADOPTED BY T. A. T.

In affiliating itself with the Aerocar and Curtiss organizations, the Pierpoint Company follows in the footsteps of a number of large automobile manufacturers who have created subsidiaries for the manufacture of airplane motors and accessories and for the operation of air transport services.

The Aerocar Company is the builder of a new type passenger coach, the invention of Glenn H. Curtiss. These new coaches have been adopted by the Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., for service in its coast-to-coast hookup of airplanes and the Pennsylvania and Santa Fe railroads. The coach is a trailer type car and is employed with a power car of the roadster type. It is said to be more comfortable and capable of increased speeds.

According to officers of the Pierpoint Company, Mr. Curtiss drew extensively upon his knowledge of airplane construction when he designed the Aerocar and the Aerocar coupler. The coupler takes all thrusts regardless of the point from which they come. The frame, too, was designed to take up all vibration. The cars have been designed for various commercial and private uses, and among the models available are passenger and school buses, tourist cars and commercial cars, equipped for their various needs.

AFFILIATED WITH BETTIS

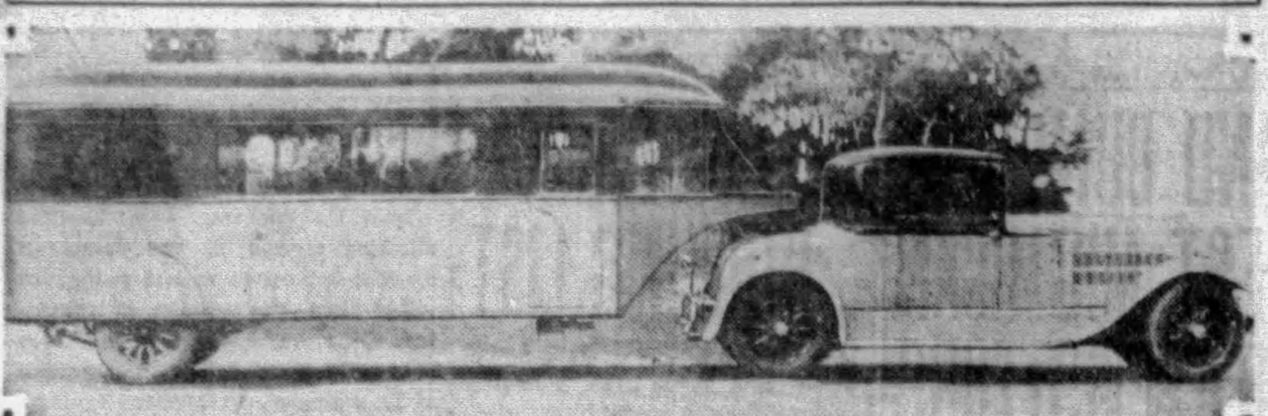
Among the airplanes which will be included in the new sales service created by the Pierpoint organization will be the Curtiss-Robin, the Fledgling, the Cesna, a racing plane; the Commandaire, and the Sikorsky and Ireland amphibions. These planes range in capacity from one and two passengers to the gigantic transport types.

In addition to its airplane sales service the Pierpoint Company will maintain an office for the arranging of all classes of commercial flying service, including cross-country transportation, passenger flights, aerial photography, student courses in aviation and other industrial applications.

This service will be in connection with Aircraft and Airways, Inc., of American, which operates Bettis Airport. This service is to be made available throughout day or night.

The Aircraft and Airways, Inc., of which Capt. Hal Basley is the chief pilot, is a member of the C. M. Keyes Group of New York, which operates the Curtiss interests.

THE AERO CAR COMES TO TOWN



ON EXHIBIT— A model of the Aerocar, which has been adopted as a part of the service of the Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., the new coast-to-coast transportation service, has been placed on display in the show room of the Pierpont Motor Company. The Pierpoint Company will act as distributor for the Aerocar in this territory.

FRANKLIN TEST PLANTS BUILT

For the purpose of conducting elaborate development and endurance tests on water-cooled and Franklin air-cooled engines, two new research laboratories have recently been completed at the factory of the Franklin Automobile Company in Syracuse, N. Y. The laboratories have been skilifully designed to duplicate every type of road conditions, at the same time permitting closer observation, compilation of data and the taking of measurements with an accuracy impossible on the open highway.

The engine development laboratory is housed in a specially constructed building with equipment that includes two double-ended 150-horsepower dynamometers capable of testing four engines at one time, By the mere turn of a rotary switch, 24 temperatures are measured simultaneously, including the temperatures of such inaccessible elements as pistons, connecting rods, valves, air, cylinder gas and other items.

An accessory sub-division of the laboratory furnishes facilities for test and development of starters, generators, ignition equipment, batteries and other accessory equipment. In fact, every accessory before being adopted for production must pass rigid life tests in this division.

Whippet Features Increase Comfort

Improved mechanical features introduced in the Superior Whippet fours and sixes to enhance their riding comfort have brought in thousands of favorable comments from Whippet owners all over the country, according to reports of Willys-Overland dealers.

With the open touring season at its height and drivers putting their cars through the gruelling tests of bad roads, steep hills and sharp curves, engineers of the company are gratified over the testimony of many owners that the Whippets have established a power of performance and riding comfort to a degree never before attained in previous models of this line.

Wrong Brake Usage Racks Entire Auto

Sudden or vicious application of brakes while a car is traveling at high speed puts a tremendous strain on all parts of a car.

Continuous rough usage of brakes will result in many troubles throughout the entire car—such as decreasing tire mileage, loosening spokes, rapid wear on universals, differential, wheel keys, transmission gears, as well as general racking of the entire frame.

One of the most serious of these is the loosening or shearing off of wheel keys. Any peculiar clicking or chucking in the rear wheels when the clutch is engaged should immediately be investigated.

HUPP TAILORING ATTRACTS MANY

DETROIT, Aug. 3.—Among the many innovations which have been introduced by the Hupp Motor Car Corporation none has attracted more attention than the new styled sheet metal tailoring employed in the New Century models.

Hupmobile was the first company to design and construct sheet metal parts in conformity with the lines of the car itself. When the New Century models were first introduced, these commonplace items were elevated to a new plane in the mind of buyers because of the new flair which this manufacturer had given them. For the first time, sheet metal attachments in the rear were extended to cover the gasoline tank, providing a neater and more finished appearance.

Shortly afterward, a further development took place. Hupmobile engineers redesigned the fender splash guards in both front and rear. These were so extended as to cover spring ends and shackles. Hupmobile termed this development "tailored metal" because of its complementary effect with the car as a whole. Instead of the former practice of leaving straight edges with comparatively unfinished appearance of sheet metal parts, Hupmobile had created a new and practical style. Later developments of this sheet metal work have brought about a "unity of appearance" which has, in turn, established another new Hupmobile standard in providing engineering attention to details ordinarily overlooked.

AVIATOR USES COOPER

Life of New Autos Depends on Owners

Many years have proven beyond a doubt that the motorist who gets the utmost in satisfaction out of his car is the one who makes the first 1,000 miles dutiful miles. They are miles, so far as this type of driver is concerned, in which he has a duty to the car—the obvious one of seeing that it is broken-in intelligently. The miles that come afterward are those in which the car will have a duty to its owner. It is quite likely to repay him in kind.

Expanding Brakes Stops Car Quickly

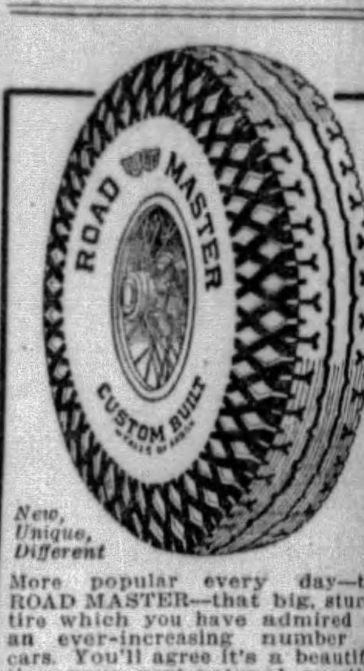
A quicker stop can be made by a car using internal expanding brakes, especially if they are cold.

Keeping Rims Clean Prolongs Tire Life

Keeping the rims free from rust helps to increase tire life but it does something else worthwhile, namely, it makes easier the removal of tires at a later date.

Valve Woes Caused By Wear on Cams

One cause of inefficient valve operation that is very rare, but none the less annoying, is the wear on the cams. This happens so seldom that it is quite hard to detect.



New, Unique, Different

More popular every day—the ROAD MASTER—that big, sturdy tire which you have admired on an ever-increasing number of cars. You'll agree it's a beautiful tire—your next natural question is, "Is its performance equal to its beauty?" Users of ROAD MASTERS will tell you that in performance it excels its appearance. You have thousands and thousands of untroubled miles ahead of you with the Road Master. For it's a Custom-Built Tire —constructed to meet the rigid motoring demands of the day.

Stutz Wins Honors In Argentina Race

Stutz has again won a signal victory by taking first, second and third in the annual La Rafaela road race, an outstanding annual event in Argentina.

According to a telegram received at the Stutz factory, all three cars were privately owned and entered. The winning Stutz was piloted by Senor Donzino, famous dirt-track driver of South America. The second and third place cars, which followed close to the winner and far ahead of the field, were driven by Colqhoun and Tozzini, also well known in racing annals of the Argentine.

The 200-mile course is one of the most gruelling roads ever encountered by racing cars and it is remarkable that a record-breaking average of 75 miles an hour was obtained.

Speed Softens Tires By Generating Heat

Motorists are tempted to speed up their cars on fine, straight stretches of concrete highway, but they do not realize that speed generates heat, and heat is the most destructive element to which tires can be subjected. Any time a driver increases his car speed five miles per hour, he is increasing the amount of heat generated in the tire from road contact, and in hot weather it is costing him in tire wear out of all proportion to anything he ordinarily gains from that speed. Heat tends to soften a rubber tread, and when rubber is softer it will shear off and wear more quickly under the abrasion of road friction than will the same rubber unheated.

Survey Shows Bus Pays Heaviest Tax

Although motor bus lines now occupy an important place in the transportation life of the nation, they are the heaviest taxed common carriers and show an average net income of only 1.67 per cent after deducting taxes, according to a survey of motor bus operating costs just completed by the National Motor Bus Division of the American Automobile Association.

Slightest Pressure Makes Clutch Slip

It is a costly habit to "ride" the clutch. The slightest pressure causes the clutch to slip—slipping causes friction and friction causes heat, which in turn burns the plates and chars the frictional surface.

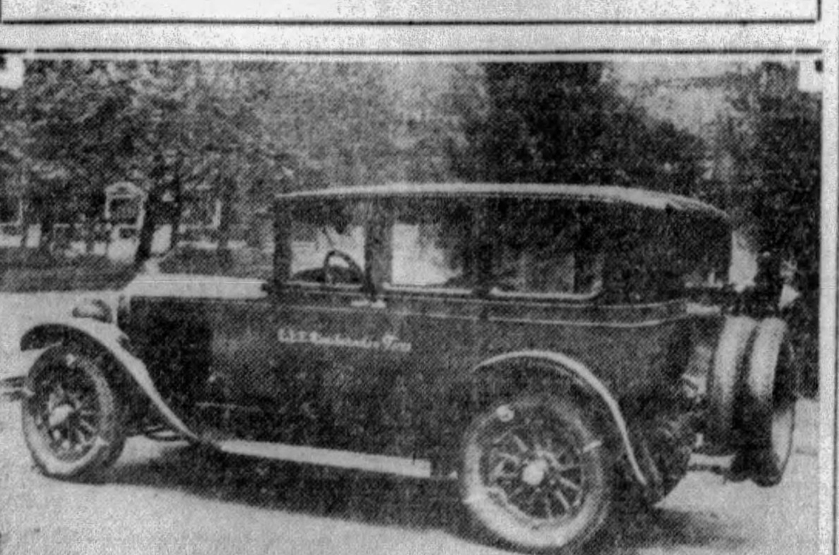
Improper Inflation Cuts Tire Mileage

Balloon tires need a correct amount of air pressure just as engines need sufficient quantity of gasoline, oil and water. An over-inflation or under-inflation of only two or three pounds will cut hundreds of miles from a balloon tire's period of service. Properly inflated balloon tires will travel approximately twice as far as tires 10 pounds over the recommended figure. On an under-inflation test, it was found that as little as six pounds under the correct pressure reduced comparative mileage about 25 per cent.

Netherlands Plans Fast Motor Roads

The Netherlands Association for Fast Motor Roads is planning a system of roads costing more than $80,000,000, which will speed up traffic in that country. Roads will extend from Amsterdam to Rotterdam, from The Hague through Utrecht to the eastern border leading into Germany, and from Amsterdam to Utrecht.

A TIRE EXPERIMENT



ON ROAD—This is one of the methods used by Lee of Conshohocken in testing rubber for tires, says E. H. Niedringhaus of Campbell-Niedringhaus, Lee distributor. The figures on the tires represent different mixtures of rubber. By making one tire of two different kinds of rubber, a more uniform check can be made because both parts are run in the same wheel and are subject to the same weight and strain.

STEEPER HILLS TAKEN IN HIGH BY STUDEBAKER

Roadster Having 63,522 Miles to Credit Easily Conquers City's Grades.

By H. W. DIETRICH,
Automobile Editor.

There is just as great a thrill for the motorist of today in the statement "I made that hill in high!" as there was a decade ago. And motorists everywhere, especially those of Pittsburgh, are again playing the game of "I can do it in high, can you?" with much enjoyment.

In this day of high compression engines and doubled horsepower hills seemingly level out under the swiftly moving modern automobiles. But there are quite a few arteries of travel in and about Pittsburgh that still tax the pulling capacity of automotive power plants.

These hills are known and employed by the automobile manufacturers as a proving ground for their products. The reputations of these hills also has spread to many parts of the country and numerous veteran motorists come here to test their cars. One of these veterans, Ralph Hepburn, visited here a week ago.

Hepburn, in addition to being a veteran automobile driver of note, also is a representative of the Studebaker Corporation. While here he was a guest of the Studebaker Sales Company of Pittsburgh. Recalling the reputation of Pittsburgh's hills, he called upon the writer to take him on a tour of them, explaining that he was not planning an official test, but that he desired to see for himself how the modern cars performed on Pittsburgh's hills.

CENTER AVENUE IN HIGH

Driving the same Studebaker President Eight roadster he assisted in driving 30,000 miles in 26,326 minutes at the Atlantic City Speedway and which has been driven a total of 63,522 miles, the first hill visited was Center avenue, Aspinwall. That thoroughfare has a wide reputation for its steep grade, and, according to neighbors, the fact that a car has been driven up it in high gear is a piece of gossip that lives for many weeks. This hill, which the car's gradometer showed to have a grade of 21 per cent, proved easy for the President Eight, the car topping the hill at 30 miles an hour with its two passengers.

The usual greeting at the top of Center avenue is "How did you make it?" Two motorists greeted our party with that query and, appearing doubtful as to our veracity, were invited to take a ride. With three passengers the car topped the hill at 27 miles an hour.

Leaving Aspinwall our next objective was the North Side district. In passing through Sharpsburg Motorcycle Patrolman Chester Zygello consented to check our speedometer. Through several tests the readings of the speedometer in the President Eight were found to correspond with those of the meter on the patrolman's cycle.

Federal street extension proved just as easy for the President Eight as Center avenue. From a start of 10 miles an hour at the foot of the hill at the car tracks, the climb was completed at 35 miles an hour. Looking about for other heavy grades in the North Side district, the party retraced its path to Rialto street, opposite the north end of the Thirty-first Street Bridge. This street has a sharp 27 per cent grade and offers no possibility for a running start. There Hepburn loaded 12 others on the car and made the climb in second gear for a test of the car's pulling power. The total weight of the car's human load on that trip was 2,075 pounds.

CONQUERS WALBRIDGE ST.

From the North Side the President Eight was headed toward the South Side, which has several steep thoroughfares with a city-wide reputation. Two of these thoroughfares are Walbridge street, a continuation of South Main street, a long, tortuous grade of 24 to 26 per cent, and Shaler street, an 18 per cent incline. Walbridge street was topped with the speedometer showing just under 30 miles an hour on two drives. Shaler street proved no obstacle to the car's pulling power, and its motor made no protest when it was driven up in high with seven passengers weighing a total of 1,085 pounds.

Heading toward the East End district, which has several hills that motorists have long used as hill climbing test courses for their new cars, a stop was made at Brady street, the grade of which varies from 20 to 25½ per cent, the gradometer showed. Making a right hand turn from Forbes street the top of that grade was cleared at 30 miles an hour.

South Negley avenue, long a bugaboo for Pittsburgh motorists, was next. Its grade averages about 16 per cent and the climb there was made with four passengers. Making a left hand turn from a standing start on Fifth avenue, the climb was completed at 20 miles an hour. Penn avenue in Wilkinsburg passed under the wheels of the President Eight at the rate of 50 miles an hour at the top of the hill. Tokio street, with its 20 per cent grade, was no handicap. Seven were carried up it in high gear.

Somebody had recommended that we try Columbo street. It was our next objective. Despite the fact that it was necessary to use the brakes because of men at work repairing the street, that thoroughfare was topped at better than 35 miles an hour. The gradometer showed it to have an 18 per cent grade.

80 MILES PER HOUR

Having been driving over the city's hills for several hours it was natural that the car's speed on a straightaway should be questioned. An answer to that question was supplied on Washington boulevard, where the speedometer recorded 80 miles an hour in afternoon traffic.

Because of the outstanding performance of the car throughout the afternoon, its durability and roadability on the rough stone block streets throughout the city, it didn't seem possible that this car could be mechanically the same as others of that variety here. G. D. Jay, Jr., sales manager of the Studebaker Sales Company, in a letter to the writer, stated:

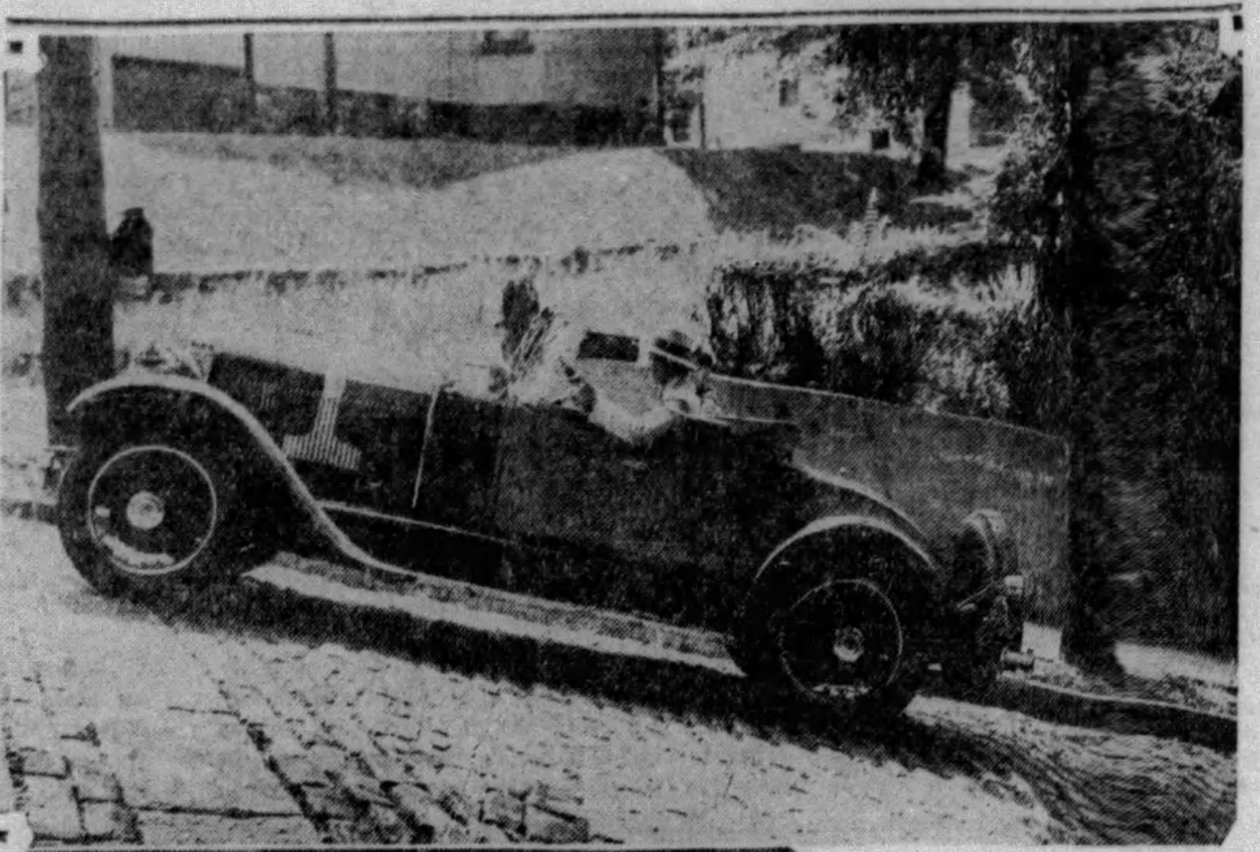
"The President Roadster used by Mr. Ralph Hepburn and yourself in the hill climbs Tuesday, July 23, 1929, is absolutely a stock car with stock ratio.

"The President Roadsters we have in stock, which can be seen on our showfloor, will deliver the same performance."

The outstanding feature of the car's hill-climbing achievement was the fact that on many of the climbs it was almost impossible to get a running start because of busy cross thoroughfares or the necessity for making sharp turns onto the hilly avenues.

Mr. Hepburn states that he regularly uses Pennzoil for lubrication and Amoco gasoline for fuel. These lubricants and fuels also were used exclusively in the Atlantic City run.

LEVELING PITTSBURGH'S HILLS



WEST END— Here is shown Ralph Hepburn and his Studebaker President Eight which was driven 30,000 miles in 26,326 minutes at the Atlantic City Speedway and which has 63,522 miles registered on its speedometer, traveling up Walbridge street, in high gear.

STEEP GRADE— Walbridge street has one of the heaviest and most tortuous grades on Pittsburgh streets. A gradometer registered from 24 to 26 per cent on the climb there, which was completed at slightly less than 30 miles an hour. High gear only was used in the climb.

You Don't Want To Slice a Drive On This Course

THE PAS, Manitoba, Aug. 3. TAG alder, muskeg, shrub and stumps offer the hazards on the farthest north golf course in Canada recently constructed at the Sherritt-Gordon mine north of here.

Engineers and laborers from the mines working together off-shift, have hacked fairways and laid greens in what a little more than a year ago was a wilderness of spruce and muskeg. In addition to being the farthest north, the sponsors of the Sherritt-Gordon Golf Club claim they have the narrowest fairways on the continent. They are 25 feet wide and once a golfer slices he is sure to need a new ball.

LINE BUILDING GIANT VESSEL

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—William Baird, steamship passenger traffic manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in New York recently for an inspection of the Bremen, commended the design and equipment of the new German liner. While in the city, Mr. Baird commented on the Canadian Pacific's proposed Empress of Britain.

"Our 40,000-ton Empress of Britain, to be placed in the Atlantic service in the spring of 1931, will have every stateroom on the outside with its own view of the ocean," said Baird. "As to speed, the Empress of Britain is designed to average better than 24 knots an hour. Leaving Cherbourg, say, on a Saturday evening, the Empress of Britain would arrive in Quebec on the following Thursday morning—an elapsed time of less than five days. And, because the distance from Cherbourg to Quebec is 156 miles shorter than to New York, the vessel may even make a strong bid for the blue flag of the Atlantic. The Empress will be an oil burner, 730 feet long, and will be capable of carrying more than 1,100 passengers in first, second and third classes. She is being built by John Brown & Co. at Clydebank, Glasgow."

Auto Ride Roughest Going Down Grade

The car will not ride as easily down hill over the same rough road that it took comfortably enough on the upgrade.

CAPE MAY HAS LARGE CROWDS

CAPE MAY, N. J., Aug. 3.—Perhaps never in the history of this coast resort have the crowds been so large as those at the shore during the present week-end.

The first annual flower show was opened Wednesday afternoon at the Convention Hall pier. A monster pageant, containing floral floats from Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey, passed over the principal streets of the city. Exhibits were shown by the New York Botanical Society, the Woodbine Community Center, West Cape May, Cape May Point, Cold Spring, Ocean City, Vineland and several commercial houses of Philadelphia.

Mrs. F. S. Austin and Miss Priscilla Austin, of Pittsburgh, are among the recent arrivals at the Hotel Colonial.

Berlin's Horsecabs Fast Disappearing

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—Only 160 horsecabs are left in Berlin. There were more than 1,000 at the end of the war, the number had dropped to 600 by 1927, and to 289 on July 1 last year. While some German cities, such as Hamburg, for instance, have done away with horsecabs altogether, they are still permitted in Berlin in order not to deprive the old cabmen of a means of livelihood. However, no new concessions are granted, and it will not be many years before the last "Droschke" will have disappeared.

Heidelberg, Freiburg Now Cure Resorts

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—Freiberg, in the Black Forest, and Heidelberg, both seats of ancient universities have added to their already renowned attractions by becoming full-fledged spas or cure resorts. Boring operations that were begun in Heidelberg in 1914 have brought in thermal medicinal springs with a strongly radioactive water. The water is used both for baths and internally. Freiberg has completed and opened an extensive institution for the administering of the "water cure" made famous by Pastor Kneipp.

Accessories "Pep" Up Old Machines

Changing the appearance of the old car makes it more pleasant always. A simple way to do it, in many cases, is to add a new radiator emblem, or some other snappy accessory.

STATE TO TAKE ROAD AND SPAN BIDS AUGUST 16

Nine Bridges and 42 Miles Of Highway Construction Planned by Commission.

HARRISBURG, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Construction of 42 miles of new road and nine bridges in various parts of the state is contemplated in projects for which the State Highway Department will receive bids August 15 and 16.

The projects, announced today by the department, include an eight-span girder bridge 551 feet long, on the Sunbury-Pottsville road, located at Mt. Carmel. The bridge is one of the items in an extensive improvement of the highway and when completed will span the tracks of the Pennsylvania and Lehigh Valley railroads and Shamokin Creek. The bids will be received on August 16.

Other projects are:

AUGUST 15

Lawrence County—3.03 miles of concrete paving and .08 mile grading in Hickory, Wilmington and Washington townships.

Berks—4.65 miles of concrete paving in Bethel Township.

Montgomery—1.39 miles concrete in Upper Moreland, Upper Dublin and Abington townships.

Juniata—4.81 miles of bituminous treated macadam in Beale and Milford townships and Mifflin.

Washington—1.97 miles of concrete in Robinson Township.

Somerset—1.78 miles of concrete and two grading projects totaling .10 of a mile in Benson Borough and Paint Township.

Allegheny—.15 mile of concrete and .20 mile of concrete and vitrified brick in Harmar Township.

Lawrence—.10 mile of concrete in Shenango Township.

Erie—One span reinforced concrete arch bridge, 24 feet long, and approaches, in Harbor Creek Township and Wesleyville Borough.

Venango—Two span bridge, 90 feet long, and approaches, in Rockland and Cranberry townships.

Juniata—One span reinforced concrete arch bridge, 50 feet long, and 1,450 feet of concrete paving in Fermanagh Township.

AUGUST 16

Allegheny—1.23 miles concrete in Shaler Township.

Clearfield—2.52 miles concrete in Gulick and Woodward townships, and Houtzdale.

Indiana—3.10 miles concrete in West Wheatfield Township.

Center—1.68 miles concrete in Spring and Boggs townships and Milesburg.

Lehigh—2.62 miles concrete in Whitehall Township.

Bedford—7.23 miles concrete in Bedford, East and West St. Clair townships.

Franklin—5.30 miles bituminous treated macadam in Washington and Quincy townships.

Mercer—1.79 miles concrete in South Pymatuning Township.

Greene—Reinforced concrete bridge of two spans, 28 feet long, and 380 feet of concrete paving in Jefferson Township.

Lawrence—One span reinforced concrete bridge, 40 feet long, and approaches, in Scott Township.

Erie—One span steel truss bridge, 185 feet long, over Conneaut Creek, and 1,610 feet of grading in Conneaut Township.

Perry—Two-span reinforced concrete bridge, 90 feet long, over Cocolamus creek, 1,295 feet grading in Greenwood Township.

Greene—Two-span reinforced concrete bridge, 52 feet long; temporary bridge and approaches and 194 feet concrete in Cumberland Township.

108 HOURS WITHOUT STOPPING

IN CITY—Poncho Palmer, shown chained to the steering wheel of a Pontiac phaeton, in which he made a 108-hour endurance run in this city last week. The run was a test of the durability of the car as well as the driver. During the run no oil was added to the motor and no water was added to the supply in the radiator. The car is on exhibit at C. A. Rehtmeyer, Inc. Mr. Palmer is a native of this city.

PACKARD EIGHT PRICE REDUCED

Packard last week announced a price cut of $290 on all models of its Standard Eight line. The announcement stated that the cut comes as a result of its breaking sales record after sales record this past spring and this summer.

"These reductions have been made because the factory expects to announce in the fall new cars which though the same in size and of characteristic Packard appearance, will have enough changes to classify them as new models," states F. E. Bishop, of the Packard Motor Company of Pittsburgh. "Many of these improvements and refinements have been in production for some time on current models. It is understood the new model will be priced higher."

This now makes Packard Eights sell at the lowest prices they ever did. The new prices apply to all of the Standard Eights, including those on the dealer's salesroom floor at the time of the announcement.

ENGINE EXHIBIT BY FRANKLIN

To emphasize the all-around efficiency of the air-cooled engine which is employed in the current series of Franklin cars showing a development of power 40 per cent greater than in previous models and to acquaint the motoring public with the functioning of this type of power plant, a series of nationwide tests and demonstrations have been arranged for the coming week. These demonstrations follow a series of actual power development tests last week in which thousands of automobile enthusiasts traversed comprehensive "proving ground" courses to get definite proof of the increased power available in an air-cooled engine.

Besides road demonstrations to show the power of the Franklin under all conditions, simple methods will be employed during the demonstration week to show the exact functioning of the air-cooled engine so that its efficiency will be readily apparent to all regardless of the extent of their knowledge of mechanics. In these demonstrations the course of the air-flow which keeps the engine at a normal temperature at all times can easily be traced.

Water in Gasoline Hampers Engine

Water in the gasoline may cause the engine to stop suddenly, but usually the stopping is accompanied by a "popping" in the carburetor and a loss of power. Sometimes the water will cause the engine to sort of hesitate a moment, then speed up, and again hesitate. The only way to correct this trouble is to drain the carburetor after gently tapping it.

DODGES ENJOY LONG SERVICE

Dependable operation of Dodge Brothers cars after 12 years and more of service is reflected by the activity of the company's service parts plant where orders are received for parts on 1914-15 models. Usually the parts are ordered for an engine still driving a car—sometimes the power plant has been removed for a stationary engine, but every mail brings in orders indicating that except for the desired replacement these ancient sturdy motors are giving satisfactory performance.

More than 25,000 separate parts are kept in stock, and to make sure of complete service, the service parts plant maintains a miniature factory where odd parts not on hand can be machined or built. Even cushions that match the upholstery of cars of years ago can be supplied. Rarely does an order balk this small factory specializing in parts long out of production.

CHRYSLER MOTORS PRODUCT

Another FINE FEATURE— Plymouth has Over-Size Tires

YOU will find on Plymouth the largest tires of any car in the low-priced field. Real over-size balloons —4.75—more than ample for this full-size car.

That is why the improved Plymouth —with all its full-size roominess and great comfort, with all its Chrysler-designed style and beauty, with all its Chrysler-like swiftness and smoothness, with all its ruggedness of construction, and the safety of its Chrysler weatherproof internal-expanding 4-wheel hydraulic brakes—with so much else to talk about, devotes an entire advertisement to over-size tires.

Larger tires mean riding on more air, which in turn means greater buoyance and comfort. Then, too, larger tires wear longer, add much to appearance and, most important of all, give the car greater traction, a firmer grip on the road—and that means sure-footed safety.

From tires to roof, from radiator to gasoline tank, Chrysler engineering genius has endowed the improved Plymouth with qualities and abilities never before available in a car of low price. Make your own comparisons —the facts can't be missed.

'MANY CAREERS BEGIN AT 50'—D. P. KINGSLEY

Real Cut in Navies Is Now Assured, Declares Lloyd George

'WE'RE SUPERMEN TODAY COMPARED WITH PEOPLE OF THE ANCIENT WORLD'

"In Terms of Achievement Our Average Man Probably Lives Twice As Long As His Ancestors, Even a Generation Ago."

By DARWIN P. KINGSLEY,
President New York Life Insurance Company.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.

THESE men are wrong who look back upon the so-called "Golden Ages" of the past and proclaim that the average man of today is inferior to his predecessors.

As a whole, we are supermen by comparison with the people who believed that the pillars of Hercules marked the western limits of the habitable world. In the not distant future our successors will be supermen in comparison with us.

FINANCIER—Darwin P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Company and student of longevity and racial progress.

Nature Is Kind to Mankind
Individual Genius Is as Powerful as It Ever Was

Nature is no longer through with men at 50. Many (I had almost said most) of our greatest careers begin at 50.

We achieve vast results through team-play, co-operation, mass production—but it is equally true that individual genius is as powerful and fruitful now as it ever was.

Its field of operation has shifted largely to the laboratory. Its high priests have been Edison, Pasteur and Marconi, who together have done more for the comfort and progress of the human race than all that was achieved by the geniuses of Egypt, Greece and Rome combined.

Man has progressed through the achievements of man, and in spite of the prodigal wastage permitted by nature. If man had no sounder economic program than nature has he would still be a tadpole.

Nature is a poor economist, a reckless spendthrift. She not only tries to kill men off by disease and quakes and floods, but she ruthlessly destroys the ripened judgment, the trained powers and the skill of the strong who have survived her earlier assaults.

If an individual solves some problem in chemistry, electricity, radiology, medicine or mechanics; if he makes some revelation which endures beyond the limits of his years, that man has forced nature to reveal something which she almost seems to hide deliberately.

But even here there is great collateral economic loss, because, however creative a man may be, however greatly he succeeds in evolving ideas which go on and on after his death, he cannot transmit his ripened judgment or his skill. He cannot even save them whole.

Die Before 60
Economic Waste for Men To Die Early

Nearly 50 per cent of the people born in any year do not reach 60. Beyond 60 the majority may not go on with much effectiveness; few may go beyond 70 and almost none beyond 80. This looks like bad husbandry, sheer economic waste.

In a glorious struggle man has lifted himself from protoplasm to rationality.

In the bitter fight through which he has advanced from a cave man in the rocks to a modern home, man has overcome many enemies, faced many frontiers.

Among these are wild beasts, superstition, ignorance, fear, and the shifting moods of nature, which have frozen him, burned him, drowned him, starved him, and driven him through millions of years hither and yon over continents and seas.

We find now and then, hidden in the folds of the earth, a page of this story. It is a story crammed with heroism and tragedy; it makes us understand that we are descended from fighting stock.

The Fellaheen of Egypt now is probably a better man than his ancestors were when the great Pyramids were built. The descendants of the Roman — the Italian, the French and the Spanish—are probably better men than the Romans were when Caesar carried the eagles of Rome to the limits of the known world and beyond. The average Roman under Augustus Caesar was undoubtedly inferior to his living successors.

Man has made some impression on nature's most brutal frontiers. He is still fighting.

Through discoveries of science, through better hygiene, fewer people die in infancy and youth than formerly. Up to about 57 the average life is longer than it was in earlier days.

At about that age the lines indicating the mortality of 30 years ago and that of the present day cross each other, and for a period thereafter the mortality is actually heavier amongst lives that have enjoyed the benefits of modern science and hygiene.

At about 70 the lines converge again and above 70 there is no appreciable difference.

Learn to Live
People Must Be Educated To Prolong Life

The gain in calendar years is all below 60. It is shown to be true that we hold death off during the productive years.

If we are to penetrate still further beyond the frontiers set up both by life and by death we must either learn to live effectively more years beyond 60, which is unlikely, or we must learn to live faster. We must achieve more. Of course science, which has increasingly defeated disease, may overcome senility, but I doubt it.

Life does not consist in mere length of days. Some insects live a full life between sunrise and sunset. Sometimes in dreams men live years in a few seconds.

The average citizen of New York lives longer in a day than the inhabitant of a desert can in a century.

Probably we cannot live so much longer in sun years than our predecessors.

We must therefore develop our brain power until, in terms of achievement, we are living 1,000 years in 70 calendar years.

Of course that can happen. It will happen.

Measured by that standard our average man probably lives twice as long as his ancestors did even a generation ago and five times as long as his progenitors of two centuries earlier.

The Work Done
Brain Is Only Fractionally Developed

That is, the survivors of what may be called the class of 1929 will, both collectively and individually, at the age of 57, have done from 200 per cent to 500 per cent of the work, had from 200 to 500 per cent of the experiences, and from 200 to 500 per cent of the joys that made up the lives of their progenitors of a few generations ago.

Scientists tell us that very little actually is known about the human brain, its organization, its real capacity and the varying functions of its parts. Enough is known to indicate that no human brain was ever more than fractionally developed.

What great potentialities may lie under our skulls no one knows.

Isn't it conceivable that some day we shall produce a race whose brain capacity will be developed 100 per cent? Would such an achievement be any more marvelous than the development of heat, light and power out of that mysterious force called electricity? It would be much

THE DUCHESS OF ATHOLL SAYS: 'WOMEN MUST HELP BIND TIES OF ANGLO-AMERICAN UNITY'

"Friendship With United States Should be the Keystone of British Policy."

By THE DUCHESS OF ATHOLL, M. P., D. B. E., D. C. I.
Parliamentary Secretary for Education in the recent Conservative Government in England; Dame Commander of the Order of the British Empire; Member of Parliament since 1923.

LONDON, July, 1929.

GREAT BRITAIN recently emerged from a general election in which, while the problem of unemployment was undoubtedly the main issue, questions of international peace and reduction of armaments played a prominent part. To work for enduring peace in Europe and the world at large is more than ever a cardinal principle with all political parties, and the twin pillars on which such a peace must rest are generally recognized to be support of the League of Nations, and Anglo-American friendship.

Time was when we prided ourselves on a traditional British isolation from European affairs, but in the late war our whole weight had to be thrown into the scale. The loss of nearly a million lives and the disablement of another million insure our whole-hearted support of the league. Further, under the Locarno treaties we have guaranteed the integrity of the new frontier between Germany and France, long the most sinister danger zone in Europe.

PEERESS — The Duchess of Atholl, highest ranking member of the British Parliament and wife of the largest landowner in Scotland.

Our vision, however, covers a much wider field. It must first include in its sweep the dominions and dependencies of the British Commonwealth. But always it reaches out to the greater English-speaking state, which, while deriving its strength today from many racial strains, through its earliest founders claims a common heritage with us in the England of Chaucer, Spencer and Shakespeare—a nation in whom we recognize community of outlook and aim, a common love of liberty, of peace, a common concern for the welfare of mankind.

Friendship with the United States of America must therefore be a keystone of British foreign policy.

I am convinced that this great fact has been recognized by an ever-increasing number of British citizens since the United States entered the World War. The stream of friendship may, from time to time be checked here and there by stones or weeds; there may be ripples at times on its surface, but on it flows, gathering volume and momentum on its course.

While we in Britain work incessantly for closer understanding and friendship with all countries, and find in the League of Nations a machinery admirably adapted to this purpose, the desire for friendship with the people of the United States strikes a unique chord in the minds of all thinking British citizens.

Disarmament
All Parties in Britain Economic Advance

Relations between the two countries have of late largely centered around the question of the limitation or reduction of armaments. Every political party here desires not only limitation, but reduction. It is only the increases in the pay and pensions of the Army and Navy—even greater than those which have taken place in the cost of living since 1914—which obscure the fact that, in spite of a newcomer in the shape of an air force, the personnel of our armed forces today is much below pre-war strength. Yet all parties, recognizing the implication of the Kellogg pact, are anxious to go further. All the study and discussion of the last year or two may perhaps tempt us to measure our relationship too much in terms of success or failure in these naval disarmament negotiations. But the question of Anglo-American friendship is something very much larger than mere tonnage or gun caliber. Naval strength may be measured by "yard-sticks," but not friendship and understanding. It would be disastrous indeed if spiritual values such as these came to be identified with largely material ones.

Here surely is work for the women of both countries. In the first place: to realize the tremendous meaning of that great pact for the renun-

PACIFIER—An interesting caricature of Ambassdor Charles G. Dawes, an outstanding figure in the negotiations between United States and Britain on disarmament and other problems contributing toward international peace. Drawn by Massaguar, noted Cuban caricaturist of eminent personages.

'HOPE OF ARMS REDUCTION RISES AS MENACE OF WAR WANES IN THE FAR EAST'

"Hoover-MacDonald Declarations Presage Successful Naval Conference; Stimson's Intervention Was Great Service."

By DAVID LLOYD GEORGE,
Former Prime Minister of England.
By Special Cable.

LONDON, Aug. 3.

THIS is a good time for those who wish and pray for the cause of peace. The declarations of President Hoover and of the British Prime Minister make it clear that the coming naval conference will not end in a disappointing fiasco like the ill-fated Geneva proceedings of two years ago.

A real cut in navies is already assured. Even if nothing further eventuates from the approaching discussions, a substantial reduction in armaments has already been achieved as a result of the preliminary exchange of of views.

Other Naval Powers
They Should Be Included in Disarmament Conference

The French papers manifest a certain uneasiness at these pourpariers. I hope, therefore, that every effort will be made to carry France, Italy and Japan along with Great Britain and America in these negotiations.

There must be no appearance of confronting these great powers with a fait accompli at the conference. To effect any notable advance in disarmament they must also be induced to cut down their cruiser and submarine program.

Any offense to their amour propre would provoke resistance on their part—none the less refractory because it was unconscious. Anything which looks like dictation from the English speaking commonwealths will be resented. Apart from that the conditions for an agreement are highly propitious. The change of ministers in both Britain and France is all to the good.

Catastrophe
Russo-Chinese War a Serious Business

The outlook in China is improving. The clouds have not been altogether dispelled, but they are not as lowering and menacing as they were, and there is a clear blue sky ahead. Mr. Stimson's intervention was timely and effective. It has rendered a great service to the world.

A war between Russia and China would have been a very serious business. It might easily have led to inconceivable catastrophe. If Russia won it would have been difficult to have set any safe bound to the march of her victorious armies.

Moreover, she would have deemed it necessary to remain in possession of the territory through which the contested railway runs from the frontier to the sea. Such an occupation would cause uneasiness in Japan. Opinion is easily excited there over foreign intervention in the affairs of Manchuria. That rich province with its unlimited possibilities has already provoked two wars within the lifetime of this generation.

Although every country in the world now shrinks from the prospect of armed conflict, one must not trust too much to that reluctance. Nations do not make war because they want to fight but because they have been landed, either by stupidity or malignity of their agents, in positions from which they cannot recede without loss of honor.

The immediate danger which was greatest has passed away. The real apprehension that was felt throughout the world was that the hot-headed and irresponsible officials on the spot might precipitate a struggle. Once blood was shed, passions would be let loose which it would be difficult for diplomacy to restrain.

Pacific
Russia and China Cannot Afford War

Now that the dispute has passed from these impulsive hands into those of competent diplomatists representing the two central governments, the prospect of accommodation is assured.

I believe that both the Russian and the Chinese governments are honestly pacific in their ideals and intentions.

But quite apart from that, considerations of national self-interest must drive them in that direction. Neither Russia nor China is in a position to wage war. I am certain that the rulers of both these great countries will strive hard to avoid it.

Russia, in spite of her gigantic national resources, is economically in a very precarious position. Three years of disastrous war on a colossal scale—and after that three years of devastating civil war spread over the whole of its vast territories, has left Russia exhausted and bankrupt. Last year's harvest was a failure and the Russian people have barely escaped famine. This year's harvest is reported to be good. But it will leave no margin for war.

Every penny of Russia's surplus produce will be needed to help in the restoring of its economic organization to a position where the country can depend on being self-supporting. That will take years of tranquility to achieve. If the Russian armies were defeated the existing govern-

MY STORMY LIFE By LEON TROTZKY

'How I Escaped From Siberia in 1917 In Reindeer Sled Over Icy Wastes'

'Goat's Foot' Engineered Perilous Midwinter Dash for Liberty To Ural Mountains

By LEON TROTZKY.

CHAPTER VI.

MY second prison cycle began. I stood it much easier than the first; the conditions were, beyond comparison, more favorable than those eight years before. I was kept for some time at the "Cross" prison, then in the Peter and Paul fortress, and finally in the "House of Preliminary Detention." Shortly before we were sent into exile to Siberia we were placed in the "Transit Prison." Altogether it lasted 15 months.

Each of the prisons had its peculiar features to which one had to adapt oneself. But in spite of the great variety of their arrangement, all prisons very much resemble one another. I was again able to devote myself to systematic scientific and literary work.

My critics who are now so numerous in all parts of the world and who are followers of Stalin, the majority of whom became aware of the existence of debatable questions on the revolution not earlier than the end of the year 1923, might in truth do worse than sit down to a thorough study of my "Totals and Prospects" which was written then in prison in 1905—12 years before the 1917 revolution. This applies in full to Stalin also.

More Freedom
First Duma Puts Life Into Politicians

After our transfer to the House of Preliminary Detention we were allowed to receive the visits of our counsel. The first Duma brought new life into matters political. Newspapers began to speak more audaciously. The publishers of Marx's works were busier. I wrote a good deal in prison, and the lawyers took away my copy in their brief-cases. For recreation I read the classical authors of European literature. It was then that I made my first acquaintance with the great masters of the French novel, and my love of the French novel has remained with me even today.

Good Schools
Prisons Served Him in Many Manners

All in all I have no reason to complain of my life in confinement. My prisons were good schools for me. I left my isolated cell in the Peter and Paul fortress with a tinge of regret. It was so quiet and calm there, life flowed so smoothly, and an ideal surrounding for intellectual work.

The House of Preliminary Detention on the contrary was full of people and bustle. There were many men there under sentence of death: acts of terrorism and armed expropriation occurred in large numbers all over the country.

The regime in that prison, by reason of the existence of the first Duma, was liberal. The cells were not locked up, exercise walks were taken in common.

Parvus would walk about the yard with Deutsch. Often I joined the pair. Deutsch, although an old man, was full of energy, was planning the escape of a whole group, and had easily persuaded Parvus to join. With much insistence he tried to persuade me also.

I resisted because I was attracted by the political significance of the public trial we were due to have. But the plan became known to too many people. Deutsch had to make his fourth escape all the same, not from prison, but from Siberia.

400 Witnesses
Entire Police Force Is Mobilized

The public trial of the Soviet of the Deputies opened on September 19th during the honeymoon of Stolypin's drum head court martials. The courtyard of the Law Courts Building and the adjoining streets were a military camp. The entire police force of Petersburg was mobilized.

But the trial itself was conducted with a considerable degree of freedom. The reaction was anxious once for all to discredit Count Witte by exposing his liberalism, his weakness toward the revolution. Some 400 witnesses in all were called, and more than half appeared and gave evidence.

During the month the trial lasted, they had to undergo the fire of cross-examination by the judges, public prosecutors, counsel for the defense and the accused prisoners themselves.

More especially by the accused prisoners who were anxious to reproduce and did succeed in reproducing trait for trait, and detail by detail the whole tale of the work of the Council of Workmen and Peasants. Thus our great aim was achieved.

Ordered Back
Orderly Proceedings Made Impossible

The court refused to allow Senator Lopukhin to be called to give evidence. It was he who, as Director of the Police Department, established great printing works which produced appeals to perpetrate pogroms. We then deliberately made all further orderly proceedings impossible, the court ordering us to be taken back to prison and the trial to proceed in our absence.

After our removal our counsel threw up their briefs, and the witnesses as well as the public left. The judges remained in the sole company of the Public Prosecutors. The sentence wa sread in our absence.

Both my parents attended the trial. They had rather mixed thoughts and feelings. They could no longer explain my conduct by boyish exuberance, as they tried to do in my Nikolayev days. I was editor of newspapers, chairman of the Soviet, I had a name as an author.

During my speech to the court, of whose meaning she could understand very little, my mother cried quietly. She wept more violently when a score of counsel came up to shake hands with me. Father was pale and silent, happy and downcast at the same time.

We were sentenced to deprivation of all civil rights and to exile by deportation. This was a comparatively mild sentence. We expected penal servitude. But exile by deportation by sentence of a court of law was a very different thing from my first exile by administrative order. Exile by deportation was for life, and any attempt to escape was punished in addition by three years' penal servitude.

We were served out convicts' clothes, without the "ace of diamonds" on the back, it is true. I managed to keep my own shoes. That was of great importance for me. Under the sole I had concealed a thin passport, and inside the heels I had several gold coins.

Well Treated
Uncertainty as to Conditions Prevail

We were all sent to the village of Obdorsk, far beyond the Arctic Circle. Unusual measures of precaution in guarding us were taken. At the same time the prison authorities treated us with every consideration. The chances of revolution and counter-revolution were just then fairly equally balanced. It was uncertain who would be top dog.

As far as Tumen we traveled by railway, but further on as far as Tobolsk we were taken in sledges, down, down the River Ob. It took us more than a month, passing through regions where a typhus epidemic was raging, to reach Berezov, the place whither once Peter the Great's principal collaborator, Prince Menchikov, was sent when he fell in disgrace. It was there that I decided to try my luck at escaping.

IF THESE GRIM WALLS COULD SPEAK—One wing of the ancient and historic Peter and Paul fortress prison on the Neva, St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), where Czardom incarcerated numberless political prisoners and where Trotzky was imprisoned in 1906 before he was sent to Siberia for a second time. Curiously enough, Trotzky says he left it "with a tinge of regret."

Given a Rest
Faked Illness So as to Go to Hospital

At Berezov we were given a rest of two days. We still had to go some 360 miles more to Obdorsk. We were allowed to walk about freely. The authorities did not apprehend any attempt at a flight from here. To go back there was only the high road over the frozen Ob along the line of telegraph poles. Any fugitive would necessarily be caught.

At Berezov there lived in exile the land surveyor, Roshkovsky. I consulted him as to any possible way of escape. He told me:

"You might take the chance of escaping directly due west on the River Sosva toward the Ural Mountains. There are no roads there, unless perhaps the nomadic Ostiaks may have left the tracks of reindeer sledges. The police could not overtake you there. But, of course, you may perish in the snow. It is now February, the month of the snowstorms."

Dr. Feit, a fellow exile, taught me how to simulate sciatica so as to be able to remain a few days longer at Berezov, and I was placed in hospital.

Roshkovsky called in consultation a local peasant whose name was "Goat's Foot." That little man, dry as a bone, cool and resourceful, became the organizer of my escape. He acted perfectly disinterestedly. When his participation finally became known he was cruelly punished.

With Czar's Police Hunting Him He Again Became Emigre From Russia

[AUTHOR'S NOTE: In my book "1905" I deliberately gave an untrue account of this part of my escape. In those days it was, of course, impossible for me to put the Czar's police on the track of my helpers. All the same I trust now that Stalin will not prosecute them, especially as so many years have elapsed since their crime. Moreover, on the last stage, as will be seen, I was also helped by Lenin.]

After the 1917 revolution "Goat's Foot" heard who it was that he had helped to escape 10 years before. It was not till 1923 that he came to me in Moscow and our meeting was cordial. He was given the full dress uniform of a Red army soldier, was taken to theaters and given a gramophone and other presents. Soon after that the old man died in his far northern home.

From Berezov it was necessary to travel with reindeer. The whole problem was to find a guide who would risk starting at this time of year on such a doubtful journey. "Goat's Foot" found a Zyrian native, a heavy, experienced man, but, like most Zyrians, a drunkard. It was this man who later betrayed "Goat's Foot." But he got me away successfully.

Prisoner Flees
Trip of Freedom Lasts For Seven Days

My departure had been arranged to take place at midnight on Sunday. When the church tower struck 12 I went to "Goat Foot's" yard. The sled was ready. I laid myself flat in the bottom of it. "Goat's Foot" covered me up with frozen straw, trussed it up properly and off we went. The straw began to thaw out and cold streamlets went over my face.

After going a few miles we stopped. "Goat's Foot" untied the straw and I crep out from my hiding place. My driver whistled. Voices answered, which evidently were those of drunken men. The Zyrian native was tipsy and, moreover, he had friends with him. This was a bad start. But there was no choice.

Had 'Currency'
Spirits Most Valuable Assets on Trip

I stepped onto their light reindeer sled with my scanty luggage. I had two fur coats on, fur inside and fur out; on my feet I also wore fur socks and fur boots, and I had a double fur hat and double fur mittens—the full kit of an Ostiak winter traveler. In my luggage were several bottles of spirits, the safest and most widely accepted equivalent for "currency" in that snow desert.

We drove along the River Sosva, aiming to reach the narrow gauge Ural Railway, opposite the Bogoslavsk Foundries. We advanced at the rate of six or seven miles an hour. The drunken driver continually fell asleep. Dire calamity threatened both of us. He would make no response whatever to my prodding or pushing. Then I would pull his hat off his head; in a few moments his hear would be covered with hoar frost, and that sobered him.

We crossed forests, snow-covered marshes and enormous patches of ground from which the trees had been burnt. Amid the drifts we would boil snow-water to make tea. My guide preferred spirits, but I saw to it that he did not drink to excess.

The trip lasted a week. We had traveled over 425 miles and were approaching the Ural Mountains. We met traveling convoys at increasingly frequent intervals. I declared myself to be one of the engineers who went with Baron Toll on his Polar expedition.

Becomes Clerk
Enters Employ of Russian Government

From the Urals onward, it was possible to travel in a horse-drawn carriage. Here I became a minor government clerk, Vikentyev, and together with an excise inspector who was visiting his vast district, I journeyed as far as the narrow gauge railway. The station gendarme sympathetically watched me emerge from my Ostiak fur coats.

Having got on to the Perm Railway I sent a wire to my wife to meet me at a station where the two trains crossed. She did not expect that telegram, at all events not so soon. Nor was it a wonder.

Our journey to Berezov lasted more than a month. The St. Petersburg newspapers were full of descriptions of our progress to the north. Correspondence was still coming in and everybody thought me to be on my way toward Obdorsk. My whole return journey took but 11 days. Meeting me not far from St. Petersburg naturally seemed unbelievable to my wife.

From the St. Petersburg Railway station we went straight to the house of good friends, who were dumbfounded to see me.

But the danger was not by any means over. Telegrams from Berezov about my disappearance had by now, of course, arrived. In St. Petersburg too many persons knew me by sight. Escape from exile was punishable by penal servitude.

We decided to go to Finland.

Both Lenin and Martov, who had been away from St. Petersburg for some time, were living in Finland.

I called on Lenin and on Martov, who lived in villages. Lenin's room was in perfect order. He did not smoke. The necessary copies of newspapers, with notes on them, lay where they were required. But above all, there was an unconquerable, if expectant certainty on this grey, dull and prosaic, but very uncommon face.

Lenin Approves
Leader Wanted Better Organization Plan

In conversation Lenin approved of the work I had written in prison, but reproached me for not drawing the necessary conclusions regarding organization. He was right. In parting he gave me addresses at Helsingfors which proved of the utmost value. These friends of Lenin helped me to put up in a modest way at Oglbu, near Helsingfors, where later Lenin also lived.

At Oglbu I spent several weeks with my wife and our baby son, who was born when I was in prison. It was in this solitary retreat that I wrote the description of my journey "There and Back" and the money I received for it enabled me to go abroad via Stockholm.

Until I crossed the frontier I was accompanied by a young Finnish girl "activist." At that period the Finnish activists were friends. In 1917 they became Fascists and sworn enemies of the 1917 revolution.

The Scandinavian steamer carried me away on a new emigration which was to last 10 years.

INTERVIEWING The IMMORTALS by George Seibel

John Keats Tells All About Fanny Brawne

LONDON, July, 1929.

PEGASUS having been scared off the earth by Henry Ford, you have to take the omnibus to reach Hampstead, where John Keats wrote his "Ode to a Nightingale." Just north of Hampstead Heath, where bold highwaymen used to lurk, but now 'arry and 'arriet spend Sunday afternoon or Bank Holiday, stands a bench at the end of Well Walk. Here Keats used to sit waiting for the Muse. Here I sat, waiting for John Keats.

As he came up from the direction of Keats' Grove, as they now call the street where he lived with Charles Armitage Brown, I recognized him at once.

"You look just like your pictures by Severn," I told him. "It's a capital idea, if you haven't any Boswell at hand, to keep a good portrait painter in convenient reach."

"Severn was the most faithful of friends, and I caused him much trouble," declared Keats. "So it's only fair I should repay him by trying to look like the portraits he painted over a hundred years ago."

"You look well preserved," I assured him, "and your poetry keeps as fragrant and fresh as if you had written it with indelible dew upon imperishable rose-leaves."

"Do they still read my odes?"

"I can recite them for you without skipping a syllable."

"Never mind," he said. "It would worry me to hear lines I might have improved if my cough and Fanny hadn't bothered me."

"A professor of poetry in Chicago University tried to improve your odes, but he merely demonstrated that there are no nightingales in Chicago."

"I've never heard of the place," sighed Keats. "But professors must keep busy at something. How many of them are getting a good living out of Homer! But Homer had two great advantages over me. He was born where eternal summer gilds the golden isles. No poisonous fogs or icy winds could lacerate his lungs. And he was blind. He couldn't have seen Fanny."

"Haven't you forgotten Miss Brawne after a hundred years under the violets of San Paolo?"

"Forget! Forget? Where love has flowered once, it blooms immortal. She treated me badly, perhaps; she was flighty and flirtatious, perhaps; she was practical and realistic, perhaps. I was a dreamer; a foolish boy chasing the butterfly of fame; scribbling verses about gods and nymphs she's never heard of. But I loved her with a loyalty that knew no bounds. If she had known how rare such love is in this world of shallow and transitory affections, she would have treasured it as a pearl from the diadem of an empress."

"And you love her still?"

"I love her still, and better than ever. She is not what she was, but what I have made her. In my heart she has been warmed into divine perfection. If I had lived, and married her, we might have quarreled, we might have grown gray and wrinkled, we might have seen each other's frailties and imperfections in the cruel light of day when dreams dissolve. But in the shadow of the Pincian Hill I died in faithful Severn's arms, and I remember her only as the loveliness that came into my life to turn my prose into poetry."

"Your letters show she caused you much sorrow."

"Aye, and that sorrow gave my soul the strength to soar.

'GOLF HAS HIDDEN DANGERS,' WARNS DOCTOR; 'DON'T SWEAR; IT WILL RAISE BLOOD PRESSURE'

An Excellent Form of Exercise For the Average Man; 'Take It Easy at First,' Physiologist Advises

By PETER V. KARPOVICH, M. D., M. P. E.,
Former Research Fellow Russian Military Medical Academy and Professor of Physiology at the International Y. M. C. A. College, Springfield.

THE days have lengthened. Daylight saving brings to many a tired businessman the opportunity and the desire for exercise in the open air.

Many a man is saying to himself:

"To golf or not to golf—that is the question."

Dr. Karpovich.

And so it is, but there are many other questions to be answered—questions remote from the usual ones regarding the cost of golf clubs and fees and time available and partners, and whether knickers are indispensable to the proper playing of the game.

If you are considering the game of golf, consider first your blood pressure.

Ask yourself about your heart and lungs.

Think over your general physical condition.

To the average man golf is an excellent form of exercise. But to some men—and women—golf holds hidden dangers.

But even the normally healthy man should restrain his enthusiasm for the game at first. No matter how good it feels to get away from the office and the dust and grime of the city and out on the open greens of the course, go easy at first.

Nine or ten holes of golf is plenty until you have hardened your muscles a bit. Remember you are not Bobby Jones. Golf is not the most important thing in your life, but a means to an end—and that end is healthful enjoyment.

So here are some of the golf don'ts established after careful research and experimentation on a number of links and based on the study of a large number of cases.

Don't swear. When the little white ball goes swirling off into the rough, and you tramp disgustedly after it, don't give voice to those words that come bubbling up from within you. Think rather of that splendid long drive you made a hole or two back, of the beauty of the blue skies overhead and the soft cushion of grass you are walking over.

'Swearing!'
It's Bad; Scolding Is in Same Category

Swearing at golf or any other competitive game is bad. Immoral, of course, and apt to be vulgar. But more than that, it is sure to raise that pesky blood pressure of yours.

In this same category of things to avoid while golfing is scolding. That is bad for the human machinery at any time, but particularly so during a game of golf.

Excitement runs high in a close game of golf and scolding adds to that excitement, putting an extra strain on the heart and arteries. Aside from the physical reaction there is the mental one—equally injurious. Start scolding your partner—or yourself—and you let down the flood gate through which anger or rage can come, to drive your blood pressure higher and higher, until the brain is surcharged with blood and refuses to keep a directing hand on the nerves that in turn must control the action of the muscles.

So don't scold or nag when playing golf.

This "don't" leads to another.

Avoid Spouse
'Don't Play With Your Wife or Husband'

Don't play golf with your wife—or husband—unless you are both too well-bred to fuss at each other over the inevitable mistakes. Of course, there are some couples capable of watching with unmoved pulse the slicing of a ball, the failure of a putt or even some of the other heinous crimes of the golfer. But they are rare birds and above the need for heeding the ordinary rules of the game.

And by the same token try to avoid playing golf with the chap who gets on your nerves in the locker room. He is bad medicine for you, merely adding to the nerve strain under which you must play the game. Nerve strain means increased blood pressure if you are disposed that way.

In the course of a number of experiments and tests fostered by the Burke Relief Foundation and made at the convalescent home near White Plains, N. Y., recently, I had occasion to play with some neurotic patients, men and women suffering from nerve trouble of one sort or another, generally due to overstrain or overwork. Golf—exercise in the open—was prescribed for them.

'Play for Fun'
Subnormal Persons Should Not Compete

As a result of those tests I have come to the conclusion that the man or woman who is not quite up to the normal health standard should refrain from playing golf as a competitive game.

Let such a person play just for the fun of the thing—for the sake of the open and the rays of the sun overhead and the green grass underfoot.

Of course this is a hard thing for the old player to accomplish. Psychology comes into play here, and even when making practice shots the player is apt to put himself into mental attitude of competition, sending his blood upward.

Even the healthy man or woman feels a sense of depression when he or she flunks a shot. When one's game goes off and one sees the score mounting higher and higher toward the 100 mark that depression is apt to ride one's shoulders like a veritable Little Old Man of the Sea.

When one is below par mentally or physically, this feeling of depression may become a positive menace. It sends the blood pressure skyrocketing. The pulse-beat becomes irregular, the nervous tension becomes marked and there are other symptoms showing the deleterious effect the depression is having upon the golfer.

Under the proper guidance, however, much of this danger can be avoided. A handicap of one or two or more strokes per hole may put victory within the grasp of the weak player and so give to him that sense of triumph so essential to the mental well-being of many of us golfers.

Of course there is another side to this. Some players I have studied are so constituted that they are unable to accept a handicap. It seems to arouse their inferiority complex. In such cases the remedy is worse than the disease. Players of this type, therefore, should be allowed to win or lose upon their own merits—or lack of them.

It is well to remember that the average golf course of 18 holes is four miles around. In covering the course the player walks more than this, for he must take side jaunts after stray balls.

Much of this walking is up hills and over broken ground. In short, to play a full round of 18 holes means that the player must expend enough energy to lift himself up to the top of the Woolworth Building.

No sane man would attempt that on a hot summer afternoon.

There is no reason why he should duplicate the stunt on the golf links.

If we stop to analyze the psychological effect of a game of golf, the problem appears quite simple. The heart is the most important of our bodily organs. It is for the heart, then, that we are most concerned when considering golf as a game.

Let's see what happens when we make our first drive! With the first motion the heart rate increases. This increase is needed to furnish the added supply of blood to the working muscles, to oxidize and remove the waste products and to restore the used up fuel.

But when you make that drive you halt for a moment the respiration and so interfere with the free flow of blood to and from the chest. In order to remedy this condition, the heart contracts more sharply and causes an increased blood pressure.

There is a very simple way of illustrating this. Dr. James McCurdy, of Springfield College has found by experiment that if a person lifts a very heavy weight the blood pressure may rise abruptly from normal. This rise is only a temporary one and it is usually followed by an abrupt drop to normal or even subnormal pressures.

In a Trap
'His Pulse and Blood Pressure Increase'

Try this for yourself. You will feel a sudden tightening of the temples followed by a sudden dizziness. It is possible that you may even faint.

Imagine, then, a golfer trying to recover a ball from a hard sand trap. He fails once and tightens his lips, grips his club the harder, stiffens all over and tries again. Once more he fails. His face gets red.

And how is his heart behaving while this is going on? If you count his pulse beats and take his blood pressure you will easily see. Both have greatly increased.

This condition is repeated over and over again during a game of golf.

This strain on the heart and arteries grows worse with repetition. You are tired. But the interest of the game keeps you from realizing fatigue and you are in danger of reaching the point of exhaustion. That is the real peril of golf to the man or woman who is out of condition.

I have given some of the more important "don'ts" for golfers. Here are some "dos":

See to it that you have a physical examination by a competent doctor before and after your first games of the season. Every links should have a number of doctors available for this sort of thing. The examination need take but a few moments—and it might save many vain regrets.

'Your Appetite'
'If It Is Poor, It Is a Bad Sign'

Watch your appetite after the game. If it is poor, it is a bad sign and should be treated as such.

Rest for a time before eating after a game. That rule applies to all forms of exercise, but is particularly applicable to the man or woman who is out of condition.

Watch your weight before and after the game. If there has been excessive loss of weight that is a danger sign. If you regain the lost weight slowly, it is a bad omen. Better see a doctor.

Abnormal heart or kidney conditions make any severe exercise dangerous. A full game of golf, hard fought, is severe exercise.

There is but one general rule for golf—the general rule that applies to all forms of exercise:

"Take it easy at first. Give your bodily machinery time to adjust itself" to the additional strain of the game."

ciation of war, so to create the atmosphere which shall assist both countries and other nations concerned in carrying negotiations for a reduction of armaments to a happy conclusion.

Let us, however, beware of confusing the means with the end. The end is enduring peace, the inspiration of which shall more and more communicate itself to the nations which stand on the borders of civilization.

A potent means to that great end is to diminish the opportunity for competitive building of armaments. But however desirable disarmament may be in the interests of national economy, the end is something infinitely greater—the promotion of lasting peace and good will among the nations.

Need for Armies
World Still Has Thoughts Of Conflicts.

Here, then, is a second task for women—to keep that great end ever in view, whatever may be the outcome of discussions on armaments. Our detachment from any share in national defense should free us from the risk of becoming immersed in calculations of tonnage and gun caliber to the exclusion of all else.

It need not, indeed it should not, lead us to ignore or despise these things. They are needed in a world accustomed to regard war as a normal instrument of policy. If, however, the modern world, in which the United States, is entering on a new path, armies and navies gradually assume a different perspective.

Our equipment as women for the task of cementing international friendship is more than merely negative. Surely there are few women, mothers or not, in whose lives the art of smoothing away domestic difficulties has not got to be practiced if the house is to be in any real sense a home. And the woman who can insure peace in her household and family can insure it not only among her neighbors, but, through her newfound citizenship, in an ever-widening sphere.

Young people may be hard to guide in some directions, but prejudices or hero-worship instilled in earlier days die hard. Much I am convinced can be done through a careful choice of children's books. How all-important that books for English-speaking children should include wholesome and attractive pictures of life in all the great English-speaking countries.

There must be many English and Scotch women today who feel as if part of their childhood had been spent in new England with Miss Alcott's entrancing group of "little women;" while British boys still share in spirit in the glorious adventures of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn.

Could understanding and friendship grow from healthier soil? And if to books such as these be added stories from the lives of the great men of the other country, lasting hero-worship may be the result.

Other important influences are the historical textbooks in use in schools. How much life-long, nation-wide understanding may be caused here by omission of over-emphasis! Many of the textbooks in both countries, I believe, have been overhauled in recent years.

Women teachers and school authorities should be able to help to insure that the books used give an accurate, and as far as is humanly possible, an unbiased account of past events.

Nor, of course, does the influence for good or ill of Anglo-American literature end with childhood. National barriers mean little to the poets and philosophers, and the United States has produced many whose names have been a household word in this country, but the novel and, even more, the films are the chief means by which the mass of the people of both countries will come to know something of each other's lives. What an argument for the production of books and films which will show life in both England and America at its best, not its worst.

Though the sexes may be equally represented in cinema audiences in either country, I suspect that in the United States, as here, there are more women than men who have both the leisure and the taste for reading fiction. Here, then, is our chance of forging another link in the great chain of understanding and friendship.

Again, more leisure for reading probably spells more leisure for travel, though the traveling of Englishwomen often necessarily be limited by financial considerations. The American woman, therefore, is probably better known in England than the Englishwoman in America, and the apparently inexhaustible interest shown by women visitors from the new world in all that an old country has to offer of historic value insures such visitors a hearty welcome.

Women Factors
Bonds of Friendship Principal Factor.

Finally, we women in both countries hold in our hands the main fabric of social life. If we have once caught the vision of what an informed, frank understanding friendship between Britain and America should mean for the consolidation of world peace, then we shall realize that while pacts and agreements may be the foundation on which such a structure may be erected, individual bonds of friendship must be the cement which will make it possible for the edifice to be built and to endure.

We shall feel that of the many causes which claim us in this busy, hustling world, one of the noblest to which any life may be dedicated is that of the promotion of friendship between the two nations to whom the English language is their mother tongue.

Cut in Navies Is Now Assured—Lloyd George

ment at Moscow would be so discredited that it would necessarily fall. But even a successful war would end in ultimate disaster for it would more than disappoint every hope of economic reconstruction.

At least it would land Russia in grave difficulties with the powerful nations who would view with suspicion any invasion of China by the Red Army. The Soviet Republic has no friends. Its obvious policy is to avoid converting suspicion into active hostility.

The Russian army itself, although formidable in a war of defense, is quite unfitted for carrying its operations beyond its own frontiers. It put up a wonderful fight during the civil wars of 1918 to 1919 and 1920. But the remarkable book written by a young Russian who served in Budyenny's famous cavalry will give an idea of the deficiencies of transport and equipment with which that brilliant general had to cope. That accounted for the failure of the Polish campaign of 1920.

Trotzky, who is probably the greatest organizer of revolutionary armies since Carnot, was alive to this deficiency and for that reason was opposed to the invasion of Poland. Since then some improvement has been effected in the organization of the Red army. But I doubt whether even now it is capable of waging war at a distance of thousands of miles from its headquarters.

A civil war could be conducted by a brilliant general in command of a mobile force of cavalry and machine gunners and of infantry moving about on ramshackle country gigs. They cut off communications and darted here and there, taking by surprise the ill-led armies of the incompetent White generals. That kind of warfare would not avail against the moderately well organized and well equipped armies founded by Chang Tso Lin and the Christian general.

The Manchurian army is largely reinforced and officered by old soldiers from the Czarist army. Taking everything into account the probabilities are that if war were unfortunately to ensue the hordes of the Red army, used as most of them are to real fighting in the Great War, would ultimately overwhelm the forces which have no experience of the actualities of war under modern conditions. But for the reasons I have indicated, there is an element of doubt and I am sure that the shrewd fanatics who direct Russian affairs are quite conscious of that fact. War would not suit them and they may be relied upon to do their best to avoid it.

What about China? She has barely emerged from a civil war which raged for years from the Great Wall to Canton. It will take many years of good government by her rulers and hard work by her industrious people to repair the devastation effected by armies one-third patriot and two-thirds bandit.

The Federal Republic evolved by the war has not yet been firmly established. The leading ministers have won a good reputation for wisdom. War with a great European power might shatter their last chances of establishing a strong central government at Nanking. They may therefore be relied upon to strive for a reasonable peace.

The Russians seem to have a substantial grievance. They constructed a railway and they have $200,000,000 invested in it. Even Communists cannot possibly regard with equanimity the ruthless application of their principles to their own possessions. The Chinese who are not devoid of a sardonic sense of humor, will probably recognize that they have carried this joke far enough. Peace will thus be restored.

more understandable than radiology.

Then indeed will the superman have arrived. He will have a fully developed brain. He will be really civilized. He will be led by his reason and will not be governed by his prejudices, superstitions and inhibitions.

He will think. Only a few men at any time have done any real thinking; only a handful of men think now, though the number of thinkers increases steadily.

In the life of the race—covering undoubtedly 16,000,000 years—the history of any empire or republic that ever existed is as a passing season. To us these histories are most impressive.

Why did they pass? Why was it necessary for so many of their great achievements to be lost? Why did Egypt, Greece and Rome pass? They were glorious in their day. Each filled the then known world. Each did some things that still endure and that no successor has equaled.

What happened?

They all died at the top.

The people did not create their great empires; they were largely slaves.

Egypt put forth the flower of mysticism and immortality; Greece the flower of intellect and sheer beauty; Rome the flower of law and power. Each was created by a handful of great men. The top men flowered like orchids, their roots did not reach the soil.

The British empire was similarly created. So was this nation in its beginnings.

The little group at the top in Egypt, Greece and Rome was not reinforced, and as a result each degenerated and gradually died out.

That will be our story some day. The British Empire will have a similar record, unless Anglo-Saxons avoid the mistakes of earlier peoples.

Hamp Ties McNamee In Radio Favorites' Poll

Fans Name Artists They Would Like to See at Pittsburgh Radio Show Next Month—Jessica Dragonette, Mildred Hunt, Milton Cross High in Balloting.

By DARRELL V. MARTIN,
Sun-Telegraph Radio Editor.

The idol of radio broadcasting since its beginning is facing a struggle to maintain his popularity with Pittsburgh fans in the Radio Favorites Poll being conducted by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

Graham McNamee and Charles W. Hamp, who was hardly known to radioland until he performed over KDKA several months ago, went into a deadlock for the lead late Saturday. McNamee, great and popular as he is, finds himself confronted with a real problem in this fellow Hamp. Of course, Hamp's immense popularity in Pittsburgh may be attributed to his six-week stay at KDKA, while we know McNamee only as an NBC announcer who manages somehow or other to break engagements long enough each September to say "hello" to us at James A. Simpson's "show of the century" at Duquesne Garden.

Be that as it may, these two fellows are tied for first place in the Sun-Telegraph poll and it is up to fans to break the deadlock.

Occupying second place with complete independence is that beautiful songster of the air—Jessica Dragonette.

Quite a few votes separate her and Mildred Hunt, who must fight to maintain her lead over Gladys Rice, always a favorite in this city. The sudden switch to Mildred Hunt is one of the surprises of the poll.

Pittsburgh fans went to see Milton J. Cross, famous NBC announcer, at the radio show next month. Mr. Cross has a very large following among local fans, the poll indicates.

Ballots submitted to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph the first week gave the following results:

Charles W. Hamp, Graham McNamee, Jessica Dragonette, Mildred Hunt, Gladys Rice, Milton J. Cross, Vaughn de Leath, Real Folks, Chauncey Parsons, Don Bestor, Norman Brokenshire, S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel.

Beatrice Belkin, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Amos 'n' Andy, Wendell Hall, Lois Bennett, Billie Jones and Ernie Hare, Louis L. Kaufman, Mary and Bob, Paul Whiteman, Rudy Vallee.

Honor Girls Named 'Mary'

"Girls Named Mary," a specially selected group of songs by the Paul Whiteman Old Gold Orchestra will be played during the broadcast over WJAS at 9 o'clock Tuesday night, in honor of Mary Nolan, the stage and screen star, who will be Mr. Whiteman's guest in a Pacific coast studio during the program.

Vocal selections by the quartet include "Wake Up, Chill'un, Wake Up" and "Beautiful Ohio," while Mildred Bailey, contralto, and Bing Crosby, baritone, will sing "Moanin' Low" and "Walkin' With Susie."

DuPont Chooses His Favorites for Edison

In Wilmington, Del., lives Pierre S. DuPont, head of the great chemical industry of the same name, an industry mammoth even in this day of great manufacturing dynasties. Mr. DuPont has spent the greater part of his life in directing the fortunes of this far-flung industry, but in his few free moments he has developed a love for, and cultivated a keen appreciation of music.

The Edison program, which KDKA will broadcast Monday evening will feature Mr. DuPont's favorite musical selections.

Life Among Peasants In 'Russian Village'

Quiet life among the peasants on the Steppes will be picturized in song and music during the broadcast "In a Russian Village" over WJAS on Friday night at 10:30 o'clock. Together with the strange exotic music of Russian folk-song, handed down from years gone by, will be a special arrangement by Salama of the "Song of the Volga Boatmen" and the "Kamarinsky Dance."

Chauncey Parsons Sings Love Songs

Old American folk songs and modern dance music are featured by the Yeast Foamers' Orchestra and vocalists in the program which will be broadcast from KDKA on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Chauncey Parsons, tenor, and the Owen Brothers, comedy duo, are the featured artists. Mr. Parsons, a Pittsburgher, will sing "One Little Dream of Love."

Olive Palmer Sings Herbert Prize Waltz

The song which many consider the greatest work of Victor Herbert, "Kiss Me Again," will be sung by Olive Palmer, soprano soloist of the Palmolive Hour, in its next nationwide broadcast over WCAE, Wednesday night. She and her fellow songster, Paul Oliver, tenor, reach a happy agreement in a duet, "Just My Style."

Lew White to Play 'Firefly' Numbers

Outstanding works of Rudolph Friml, modern Viennese composer of light opera, comprise the recital of Lew White, organist, which will be heard over WCAE Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Three selections from "The Firefly," a bright operetta first heard on Broadway 12 years ago, open the concert.

Minstrel Quartet To Sing 'Swanee'

The quartet and orchestra of the Dutch Minstrels will unite in a rendition of the Southern rag-time classic, "Swanee," when the regular weekly show is broadcast through KDKA on Tuesday evening.

Wanderers Study For Examination

"School Days," sung by a quartet, will feature the Dark-Town Wanderers' program, 'School Examinations," to be broadcast over WCAE Friday night. Fred Van Eps will be featured in the banjo ensemble.

'Barcarolle' Friday Night

The Introduction and the ever-popular Barcarolle from Offenbach's Tales of Hoffman" are but two of the selections from famous light operas to be played by the orchestra during the Light Opera Gems program to be broadcast over WJAS Friday night at 10 o'clock.

Friml's "Love Is Like a Firefly" will be sung by the soprano, accompanied by the orchestra, the baritone contributing Victor Herbert's "Gypsy Love Song" as his share of the program.

Moonbeams Dance For Marimba Band

Moonbeams play a large part in the program Joe Green and his Novelty Marimba Band are to present during the Temple hour broadcast over WJAS on Saturday night. "Song of the Moonbeams," from the musical show "The Sketch Book," will be offered as the opening number by marimbas, saxophone and vibraphone, with a four-part number, "Waltz of the Moonbeams," giving the Hawaiian guitar unusual opportunity in an obbligato.

Honor Composer Of 'Tea for Two'

The modern American composer, Vincent Youmans, contributes the next program in the summer series of Mobiloil concerts, "Recollections of Modern Composers," over KDKA Wednesday night, at 8:00 o'clock.

The complete program includes Take a Little One Step, from "Lollipop;" "Deep in My Heart," from "The Student Prince;" I Want to be Happy, from "No, No, Nanette;" Tea for Two, from "No, No, Nanette;" Hallelujah, from "Hit the Deck."

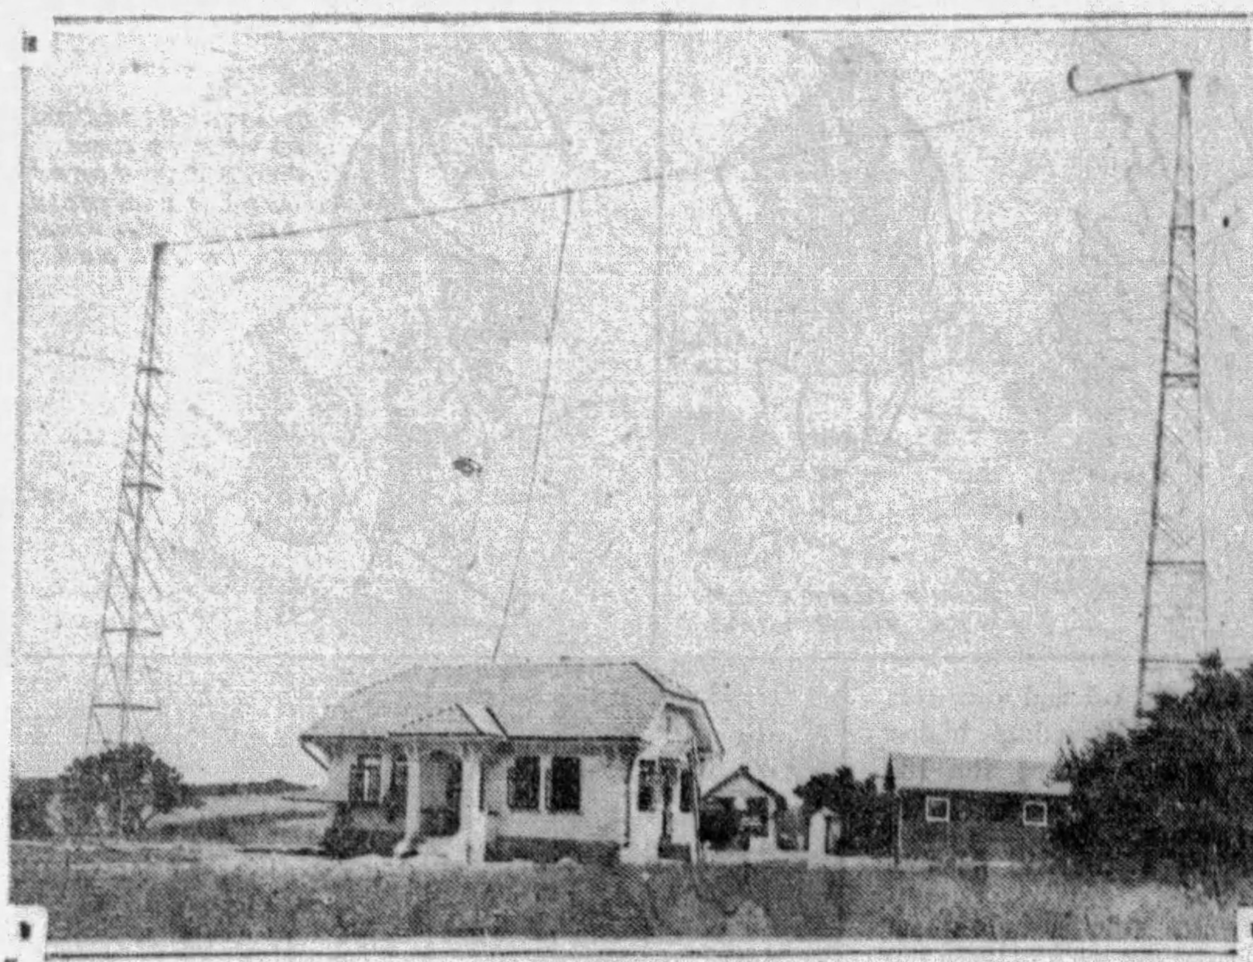
Merle Alcock Sings 'Carmen' Selections

Merle Alcock, American operatic contralto, is to be the featured artist of the Buffalo Civic Symphony Orchestra broadcast over WJAS at 9:30 o'clock Thursday evening.

The soloist will offer the beautiful "Mon Coeur s'ouvre a ta voix," from Samson and Delilah and the "Habanera" from Carmen.

GUEST soloist of the Pipes O' Pan concert through KDKA Saturday at 6:01 p. m. will be Norma Altwater, soprano.

OPEN NEW WJAS PLANT THIS WEEK



THE SUBURBAN HOME of WJAS on the Steubenville Pike outside Sheraden will be put in use this week. A thousand watt transmitter has been installed and tests will be made Tuesday. The white brick building will house all power equipment for the station, whose main studios will be located hereafter in the Law and Finance Building downtown. High upon a hill top the WJAS antenna towers rise majestically for 125 feet and carry a late design cage antenna 165 feet long. The suburban home is modern in every detail and gives WJAS one of the finest stations in the country.

H. J. BRENNAN, supervisor of WJAS broadcasting operations, here inspects a unit of the new 1,000 watt transmitter. Mr. Brennan is greatly pleased with the change in location of transmitters and aerial from downtown Pittsburgh and anticipates great results when WJAS takes the air from the Steubenville Pike towers this week.

ALREADY the station has two mascots, the police dogs Pick and Ring, who make a gesture of climbing the ladder to success. "If loud barks mean anything these fellows should be farther than the third rung," remarked pretty Virginia Anthony as she posed with them for the Sun-Telegraph cameraman. These pups may broadcast, it is reported.

Between Wavelenghts

AN argument is brewing in radiodom over what city is to be the future broadcasting center of the country.

New York feels that to it there naturally comes this distinction, but out Chicago way there is an increasing tendency toward the affirmative of the question, "Will Chicago supplant New York as the broadcasting capital of America?"

Whatever the outcome of the discussion, any move to change the "capital" only can produce better material for the listeners' ears. According to word emanating from Chicago, its side of the question is to be stressed in a favorable light by its best radio writers.

IN citing some of the issues, one self-assumed affirmative debater points to KYW, WENR, WMAQ, WBBM and WGN as the "big five" of the Chicago stations and enumerates what they are doing toward the betterment of radio. He says:

"It is contended that the 'big five' are putting out better programs hour by hour than New York stations. As a whole, they give all of the better chain features of the NBC, Columbia system and the new American Broadcasting Company circuit.

"It is argued further that the sustaining programs of these stations are superior to the sustaining programs of New York stations and that a larger sum is spent for talent in Chicago than in New York for sustaining programs. It is recognized that competition between stations in Chicago is much keener than in New York. It is said that this is due to the fact that, with one exception, the larger Chicago stations either are owned or are affiliated with newspapers."

ANY such discussion is bound to bring a reply from New York writers, whose big talking point point probably is the fact that New York is the theatrical and entertainment hub of the nation and that radio, therefore, must of needs be kept in close alliance with the stage, as the two are becoming more and more closely interwoven.

However heated the argument, it will be interesting to sit on the sidelines and watch each city attempt to outdo the other in an effort either to gain or to retain the coveted title of "broadcasting capital."

Lopez Depicts Coney Island

Ingenious musical effects woven into the "Coney Island Fantasy," will describe with exactitude the boisterous pleasures offered by New York's playground when the piece is played by Vincent Lopez and his Kylectroneers in a broadcast through KDKA on Thursday evening.

The rush and sweep of waves on the beach, the shrill whistle of the peanut man, raucous cries from the barkers, cracking rifles in the shooting gallery, screams of excitement from riders on the roller coaster, and slightly milder enthusiasm from passengers on the carousel are incorporated into the selection.

Serenaders Give 'Sweet Genevieve'

The charms of "Sweet Genevieve," the only rival of "Sweet Adeline" in the affections of male quartets, collegiate wearers of peg-top trousers, and barber shop harmonists generally, a generation ago, will be sung anew by the Lehn and Fink Serenaders and broadcast through KDKA on Thursday evening at 8:00 o'clock. Jack Shilkret conducts the orchestra.

I Wish to Know

Harold Whetstone, Munhall: Where will the new WJAS studios be located?

A. The new WJAS studios will occupy half of the fourth floor in the Law and Finance Building. They are nearly completed.

Alice McCloskey, Schenley Terrace: Tell us something of Charles Wakefield Cadman, the Pittsburgh composer.

A. At a future date we shall tell you more but for the moment we shall have to extemporize. Charles Wakefield Cadman was born in Duquesne, lived in Pittsburgh and is loved here by countless thousands who "knew him when." Gertrude Mohr, musical director at WCAE, knows Mr. Cadman very well. At present the compose. is in Hollywood. His best known composition is "Land of the Sky Blue Waters." More later.

Betty Weiss, Carrick: Who are Gus and Louie?

A. Arthur Allen is Gus and Louis Mason is Louie.

CBS Certain Of Programs From Europe

Secretary Leaves to Close Deal—WJAS First to Accept Exchange.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—Steps looking toward the interchange of programs with continental Europe are to be taken by the Columbia Broadcasting Company next month.

Dr. Leon Levy, president of station WCAU and secretary of Columbia, will sail for Europe August 2 with Isaac D. Levy, vice president of Columbia and treasurer of WCAU, to make arrangements with several short-wave stations in Norway, France and Germany for a regular program interchange schedule.

Recently the Universal Broadcasting Company, which owns WCAU, was granted a construction permit for a short-wave transmitter at Byberry, Pa. It now is nearly complete and will have the call letters W3XAU, operating on 31.2 and 49.4 meters. The station will be used for experimentation in the transmission and reception of trans-Atlantic programs.

Under present plans, WCAU will act as key station for the chain for any programs re-broadcast. Mornings will be devoted to sending programs overseas, while in the afternoon foreign stations will be brought in. The programs, picked up on a specially designed short wave receiver, will be fed into the WCAU transmitter and re-broadcast on 1170 kilocycles.

Kroens Sing For Mother

The Kroen brothers, all active in musical circles, will form the quartet which will present the Sacred Song concert broadcast by Station KDKA, Tuesday evening, beginning at 7:15 o'clock.

They will sing "Listening" especially for their mother, who in spite of the fact that she has lost her sight and has passed her sixty-seventh milestone, is enjoying every minute of her life and finds great joy and comfort out of her radio receiving set. Tuesday evening she will be at the radio in her home at Rochester, Pa., listening to her boys sing the gospel songs she loves so well.

Story of 'Clermont' On WEAF Tuesday

With a terrifying roar and a hissing of steam, the "Clermont" began its famed inaugural trip up the Hudson River just a hundred and twenty-two years ago. This significant venture of the first steamboat will be one of the high points in the Soconyland sketch, "The Clermont," to be broadcast Tuesday evening at 7:30 over WEAF and WGY.

Robert Fulton's novel invention was derisively termed "The Tea Kettle," and its launching was attended by a great crowd of curious spectators who were certain that the strange craft could supplant the sailing vessel. But Capt. Andrey Brink, erstwhile master of a river schooner, had faith in steam as a motive power; and as skipper of the "Clermont" he raced his way to Albany against his inveterate rival, who swore by wind and sail.

Bellevue Hospital Club in Sketch

Tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock the Good Will Federation will present the Home and Hospital Club of Bellevue in a radio sketch which will be written around various activities in which the club has been engaged. In addition to furnishing two rooms in the Suburban General Hospital, which are also maintained by the club, this organization contributes annually to the upkeep of the hospital itself.

The program is in charge of Mrs. E. F. Waldschmidt, retiring president of the club.

Husing Describes Imaginary Battle

Ted Husing, the Columbia Broadcasting System's star sports announcer, who has described many of the country's outstanding athletic events, will play a prominent part in Night Club Romances on Monday night at 10:30 o'clock, when he will give a "blow by blow" description of a colorful battle between two contenders for the heavyweight championship laurels. The fight, which will be of the "imaginary" variety, is to be heard as a broadcast within a broadcast over WJAS.

Briton Flyer Tells Of Ocean Hazards

Capt. Frank Courtney, the British flyer, whose gallant attempt to cross the Atlantic from East to West was halted when his ship was forced down near the Azores, will speak on "Problems of Trans-Atlantic Flying," during the Flying Story broadcast through WJAS, Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

'Blossom Time' Next Play on Philco Hour

The first act of "Blossom Time," a musical comedy in three acts, will be presented by Muriel Wilson, Colin O'More and a supporting cast of Philco's Theater Memories, during their broadcast over KDKA on Friday night.

Flower Garden Gives BakersHappy Setting

The Happy Wonder Bakers will sing and play in a flower garden setting provided for their program to be broadcast over WCAE Wednesday night at 8:30 o'clock.

"LAMB"

VARIATIONS on "Mary Had a Little Lamb" will be played on the piano by Madelein Marshall during the Baldwin program at 9:45 tonight through KDKA.

STARS

WELCOME LEWIS, NBC crooner and blues singer, is one radio performer who always has her own special microphone. Miss Lewis is very small and consequently a small microphone which she is able to reach, is needed. She usually sings with arms outstretched, keeping time with limp but expressive hands.

VERNON RADCLIFFE, a National Broadcasting Company production director, can time a play at a glance, but a recent broadcast of one of his melodramas his timing was way off. Radcliffe didn't know until the program was under way. But when a group went to the microphone to produce "crowd noises," Radcliffe grabbed the script from the leading man and woman and cut the play by three pages.

GREGORY WILLIAMSON, a production director for the National Broadcasting Company, played the parts of a dozen diners in a recent dramatic production. Williamson walked about the studio rattling a fork in a glass, thus producing the sound of crashing silver commonly heard in dining rooms.

EDWARD HALE BIERSTADT, author of "Historic Trials" and other dramatic sketches heard through NBC networks, once spent several months in Sing Sing. Not as a convict, however, his position being that of information representative for that institution.

JACK SHANNON, heard weekly in "The Gossipers," an NBC program, is a dog lover of the first water. His pedigreed Boston terriers, raised at his home just outside New York, are considered among the finest in the country.

SEEN in an office at the NBC studios, Jack Black, reformed gangster and author of "You Can't Win" (the slogan now used by the New York police department), sitting quietly in a chair discussing what's wrong with their ight people.

BECAUSE he has played so many parts on the air and has the ability to change his voice from one character to another, defying detection, G. Underhill Macy is called "The Lon Chaney of Radio." One of his outstanding roles is that of Hank Simmons of "Showboat" fame.

WENDELL HALL, the popular Majestic entertainer, originated and popularized the expressions "Yes, sur," "Hello, Folks," and "Hey-Hey."

Mabel Walker Willebrandt speaks extemporaneously over the radio—and makes a good job of it, too.

"What's in a name?" D. Noyes is the cognomen of the gentleman in charge of the sound and noise effects for Mary and Bob.

Jesse Crawford, the celebrated organist, once gave up a $25-a-week job as a piano player for a $10 salary fingering and pedaling an organ.

Herbert Straub, conductor of the Buffalo Civic Symphony Orchestra, has six sisters—all musicians.

KATHERINE McLAUGHLIN, concert soprano is to take a prominent part in the Voice of Columbia over WJAS on Thursday night.

Wakeman Off To New York For NBC Stunt

WCAE Announcer to Handle "Evening Star" Broadcast Friday Morning.

C. A. Wakeman, popular young announcer at WCAE, will be heard as master of ceremonies for the "Evening Stars" program on the WEAF network Friday morning, 11:30 to noon.

Each week "Evening Stars" is presented over the network, and dedicated to one of 21 stations who have joined this large network. It features what its title implies, noted artists who broadcast regularly on the evening programs. The chief announcer of the station to which the program is to be dedicated is on hand each week to handle the entertainment, giving a few interesting remarks about his home town and radio station.

The program which is being dedicated to Pittsburgh and WCAE Friday, will have as guest artists, Devora Nadworney, contralto, and Arcadia Birkenholz, violinist, accompanied by a symphony orchestra. Both musicians have long been radio and concert favorites.

Wakeman leaves for New York Thursday night, and will spend the week-end gathering tips for the WCAE announcing staff.

Gets Wealth, Loses Love

En route from Cincinnati to the Kentucky Mountains, Mary and Bob stop over at an old plantation, where the hospitable colonel entertains them in spacious Southern manner. The story he tells the two young travelers comes from across the continent, in the California desert, and will be broadcast over WJAS on Friday night at 9 o'clock.

"My Gypsy Girl," a stirring story of pursuit across the burning sand of the American "Valley of the Nile," tells of a young man, who in his search for wealth in a new land found also love, only to have his desert flower swept from him by a jealous father.

Troubadours Tour Gotham

The Ipana Troubadours will conduct a 30-minute tour of New York City through WCAE Wednesday night at 9 o'clock.

The half-hour jaunt provides for stops at Chinatown, the Ghetto, Little Italy, the Irish district on the the West Side, the German settlement in Yorkville, the Spanish colony at 116th street, Harlem, the heart of New York's gay Black Belt, and, of course, at the city's Great White Way—Broadway.

French Military Air On 'Libby' Concert

Classical music by French composers distinguishes "Around the World with Libby," which will be broadcast on Thursday evening, at 10:30 o'clock, through KDKA.

Saint-Saen's is the first contribution, which he makes in the form of "Marche Militaire Francaise," being a compliment to the French garrison quartered in Algeria, and the expression of his own sense of security at seeing the well-equipped native troops of France in control.

Novel Arrangement For Popular Song

An arrangement of the popular "Louise" for an instrumental quartet, composed of violin, trumpet, clarinet and piano, is featured in the Prophylactic program to be broadcast through WCAE Tuesday night. The orchestra will feature "Sympathy," from Rudolf Friml's operatta "The Firefly," and two numbers from "The Five o'Clock Girl."

Plan 'Hot Time' In Rendezvous

With Raymond Knight as master of ceremonies, the "Rendezvous at 711" brings several artists of the NBC staff to radio listeners in the broadcast through WCAE Tuesday night at 8 o'clock. The following well known performers will be heard on this date: Kelvin Keech in ukulele solos and songs; Keith McLeod, pianist; Georgia Price, harpist, and Leslie Joy, baritone.

'Believe It or Not' Basis of Song Story

Those who listen to the Song Story this week presented from WCAE at 7:45 p. m. on Monday evening will hear a song based on one of the popular expressions of the day, "Believe It or Not."

Believe It or Not is a famous cartoon by Ripley which appears daily in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

'Pilgrims' Chorus' On WJAS Monday

The beautiful "Pilgrims Chorus" from Wagner's opera "Tannhauser" will be an interesting feature of the program that will be heard in the Grand Opera Concert to be presented over WJAS tomorrow night at 8 o'clock.

Mountain Classics By Pickard Family

"Cotton-Eyed Joe," "Steam-Boat Bill" and "Well, I Swan!" are three typical Southern Mountain classics which the Pickard Family will broadcast through KDKA next Saturday evening.

'Poet and Peasant' On Gypsies Program

The popular overture, "Poet and Peasant," by Franz von Suppe, opens the next regular broadcast by the A. & P. Gypsies over WCAE Monday night at 8:30 o'clock.

Recall Old Time Land, Sea Songs

"A Life on the Ocean Wave" and "The Bonnie Banks O' Loch Lomond" are two of the songs of yesteryear brought back to memory in the Daguerreotypes program to be broadcast over WJAS at 8 o'clock Thursday evening.

High Hatters Face 'Mike' Thursday

A novel musical feature new to the air will be presented by the Victor Half Hour of Modern Dance Music on Thursday evening through WCAE when the famous Victor recording orchestra, the High Hatters, face the microphone.

GORDON C. SLEEPER, vice president of the Temple Corporation, Chicago, discussing the latest developments of radio with Edward J. Kelsky, president of Keps Electric Company, and L. H. Knibb, district sales manager for Temple Radio, during his visit in Pittsburgh recently. Mr. Sleeper, a pioneer in the radio game, spends a great deal of his time in the Temple laboratories.

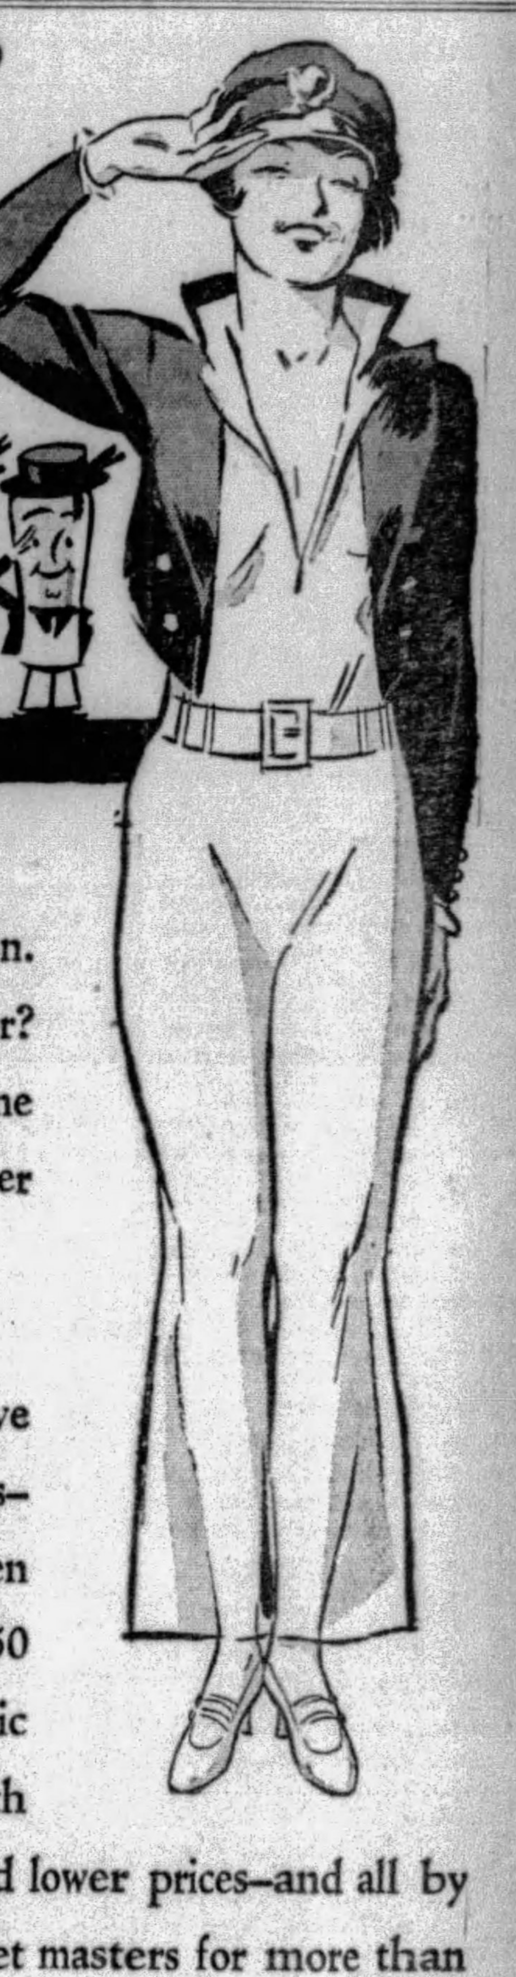
The "NAVIGATOR" ships a crew of Nine



Nine tubes certainly make a difference in radio reception. Remember your first ride behind an eight cylinder motor? Same difference here. And two of the "Navigator's" nine tubes are the giant new 245's in push-pull; another—a power detector. Distance, selectivity, tonal quality—all improved.

In exterior design, too, this latest A-C Dayton radio will give you a new thrill. Its escutcheon plate is a mariner's compass—its station control a ship's helm—and you are the master. Seven models to choose from, a smart tailored console for $173.50 complete with tubes—a modernistic highboy at $213.00 complete with tubes—others too—at both higher and lower prices—and all by Globe-Wernicke of Cincinnati, cabinet masters for more than fifty years.

Model AC-9970
Price complete with tubes $190.00

Musical Glasses.

Wesley Ossman, musical glass virtuoso, will be the featured artist.

The music is produced by rubbing the surface of the glass with the finger tips moistened with water. Music can also be obtained from glasses by using a violin bow, but the results are not as satisfactory, Ossman says.

Ossman is said to be the only man featuring popular songs on glasses. His program will include several popular favorites and an old-time ballad.

KDKA—Retold Tales.

"Treasure Island."

The quiet and malicious voice of Long John Silver will be heard in the third episode of "Treasure Island." In this episode Jim Hawkins and his friends, Dr. Livesey and Squire Trelawney, are on board the "Hispaniola," bound for Treasure Island. Whispers of mutiny have begun to disrupt the ship's company. Long John Silver, the sanctimonious old rascal who is posing as cook, prepares to seize the leadership of the party. Most of the crew are pirates in Long John's gang. However, Jim Hawkins and his friends have the upper hand of the situation. They hold the map of Treasure Island, showing the location of the Spanish gold left there by old Flint, the worst pirate of them all.

Play Called "Love."

"Love" is a story of the war and of the love of two men for the same girl. A realistic picture will be enacted of one of the heavy battles in the great conflict. But even more vividly will be portrayed the inner battle of the two men faced with death and the great sacrifice of one of them. All the drama and intensity of the war in "No Man's Land" and the heartbreaking strain embodied in it will become realistic in this history of the trenches and the love of two men.

"The Red Widow."

The cast for this production of the company, directed by Harold Sanford, follows:

Cicero Butts..............Ferris Hartman
Oswald Butts.......Harvey Hindermeyer
Anna (The Red Widow)....Gitla Erstinn
Yvette....Ivy Scott
Basil....William Daniels
Baron Popova....Walter Preston
Ivan....Barry Donaghy
Mrs. Butts....Muriel Wilson

The scenes of the musical comedy, which is a take-off on the wiles of a seductive and alluring spy, are laid in the foyer of the Alcazar Music Hall, London, a private parlor in the Hotel de l'Europe, St. Petersburg, and the gardens of the Winter Palace, St. Petersburg.

Cicero Hannibal Butts, American millionaire manufacturer of corsets, while traveling with his wife and son to visit his daughter in St. Petersburg, wears his heart on his sleeve and involves himself first with a dancer, Yvette, and later with the passionate Anna Varvara, "The Red Widow." In order to reach St. Petersburg, from which she is barred, Anna appoints Cicero her husband.

Dukes, barons, and the murmurings of a dire plot against the life of the Czar ruffle Cicero's simple soul, and he gladly relinquishes Anna to the arms of a member of the Czar's bodyguard. After some hectic adventures, explanations and regrets, Cicero is restored to his wife.

Bartering Draws Commission Fire

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—(AP.)—To help prevent the unlawful bartering of broadcast licenses, the Federal Radio Commission is planning to adopt a uniform policy in regard to the sale, mortgage or lease of stations.

The radio act stipulates that station licenses, frequencies or wavelengths shall not be transferred without the consent in writing of the licensing authority. A broadcaster who sells his station is not authorized to assign his license to the purchaser. The commission alone has the power to determine who shall be granted a license.

Congress disapproved the practice of selling licenses and frequencies because it might lead to the creation of vested rights in a particular channel. However, this disapproval did not extend to the sale of the station. The law clearly differentiates between the sale of a license and the sale of a station, says B. M. Webster, Jr., general counsel for the commission.

Train's Wild Dash Showboat Thriller

The wild ringing of a locomotive's bell, the ear-splitting shriek of its whistle, and the roar of the fast train as it thunders down the track, will all be produced with much realism when Hank Simmons presents "The Fast Mail" on his showboat Maybelle, at 8 o'clock Wednesday night over WJAS.

Because of the unusual amount of scenery, mechanical props and effects, "The Fast Mail" was never popular with the usual run of stock companies, as the script called for a replica of a locomotive emitting smoke and steam, two trains of cars and a high trestle thrown in for good measure.

Henry Clinton will portray the role of "Sam Sleuth," the comedy detective, who goes so far as to arrest his own wife (Jane McGrew), but all in mistake as later developments prove.

Plays for Brother Listening Oversea

Mathilde Harding, pianiste, will offer two original compositions by her brother, Kenneth Harding, during her joint recital with Sergei Kotlarsky over WJAS at 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

Miss Harding recently received the manuscripts for "Minuet in E Minor" and "In the Snow," from her brother, musical director of the British Broadcasting Company at Cardiff. Mr. Harding hopes to pick up his sister's broadcast through a short wave receiver, tuned to W2XE, short wave key station of the Columbia System, located at Cross Bay boulevard, in New York City.

CONVENTION

HOLD the next RMA Convention in the new hall at Atlantic City, suggests J. R. Phillips, president of the Retail Radio Merchants Association of Western Pennsylvania, as he strolls down the famour boardwalk of the popular seaside resort.

PITTSBURGHERS had their first opportunity to view the new Kylectron speaker last week with the arrival at Keystone Radio, 640 Grant street, of the new model Peerless receiving sets. Otillie Gitzen and Pete Miller, radio salesmanager, listen to the new invention.

Radio Trade News

Sonora Radio, which recently absorbed the entire plant and facilities of Federal Radio at Buffalo, will operate hereafter through exclusive jobbers, it was stated here last week by P. H. McCulloch, western sales manager of the Sonora Phonograph Company. Eugene P. Herman, formerly a very active automobile distributor in New York, has succeeded P. L. Deutsch as president of the Sonora Phonograph Company. The big woodwork plant at Saginaw, Mich., covering more than 500,000 feet of floor space, will unite with the radio plant in producing Sonora combination sets, it was said.

Of interest to the Pittsburgh radio trade was the announcement yesterday by J. P. Booker, branch manager of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, that Kelvinator-Leonard, 205 North Highland avenue, will distribute the new Brunswick Panatrope Radio beginning August 1. F. J. Natwick is vice president and manager of Kelvinator-Leonard. A. G. Burr will continue as manager of the Brunswick radio and record departments.

A report is current, at this writing, in radio trade circles of New York City, that the General Motors Corporation is negotiating to absorb the Grigsby-Grunow Company, the manufacturers of those "Mighty Monarchs of the Air," Majestic Receivers—with production plants gigantic and in series located in Chicago—once the factories of the Yellow Taxi-Cab Corporation.

Two Voices at Same Time New Stunt at WBBM

ONE announcer is usually enough, but on the popular 11 o'clock program over the WBBM Air Theater, Chicago, every Tuesday, two announcers are on duty. One does not introduce the other, but both say the same thing at the same time. This produces an effect that, to say the least, is somewhat startling to the listener who is accustomed to hearing only one voice during announcements.

Petty-June Does Europe

Continuing the Diary of Her Adventures After College Days, by the Brilliant Satirist Fish

DIARY, can you face it? Gwen and you and I are off for Europe. Gwen's dad came through like a Trojan and gave her simply oodles of money, and with the money I got for winning the "It" scholarship, we won't do so badly. When we boarded the ship Friday night photographers and whatnot simply dashed at us, and dragged me to "A" deck and simply petrified me with their flashlights.

I ASKED the Capt. if I could sit at his table, and he simply gasped! But he was really very nice about it, after I told how I simply adored French officers, and introduced the airplane pilot to me. Fancy, they shoot an airplane off the ship to get the mails there quicker or something. Isn't travel broadening?

A FAMOUS movie producer on board announced a screen test for the two best-looking girls, and I—can you face it?—have been selected. All the passengers gathered around the sun deck to watch. I posed in my snappiest and scantiest bathing suit, naturally. Just as the producer was having me pose the boat gave the most awful roll, and I was posing so near the railing I went right overboard.

WHEN we were all seated at table (just fancy, isn't it too gory for words! we eat in a saloon) I started to talk my French, but when the steward brought us sausages—which we simply loathe—instead of ice cream, Gwen made me promise to speak English.

THE aviation pilot dived after me, and, full of sea water and little fishes and whatnot, I was held up by him and a life buoy thrown us until the ship turned round and picked us up.

AND can you imagine it! The movie producer gave me $200 next day, because he held the "low field" ticket in the auction pool. You know, a lot of passengers gamble each day on the probable number of miles the ship will make. For example, if it runs within the usual limits, say between 480 and 500 miles, the holder of the correct number gets the whole amount. Below 480 it is called low field, and if the ship gets into fog and is slowed up, whatever passenger has wagered on low field wins the whole amount. My friend said my going overboard had stopped the ship long enough to make him win his low field bet, and the total amount of the pool was more than $2,000. He said I had earned my 10 per cent. Can you imagine my gasp!

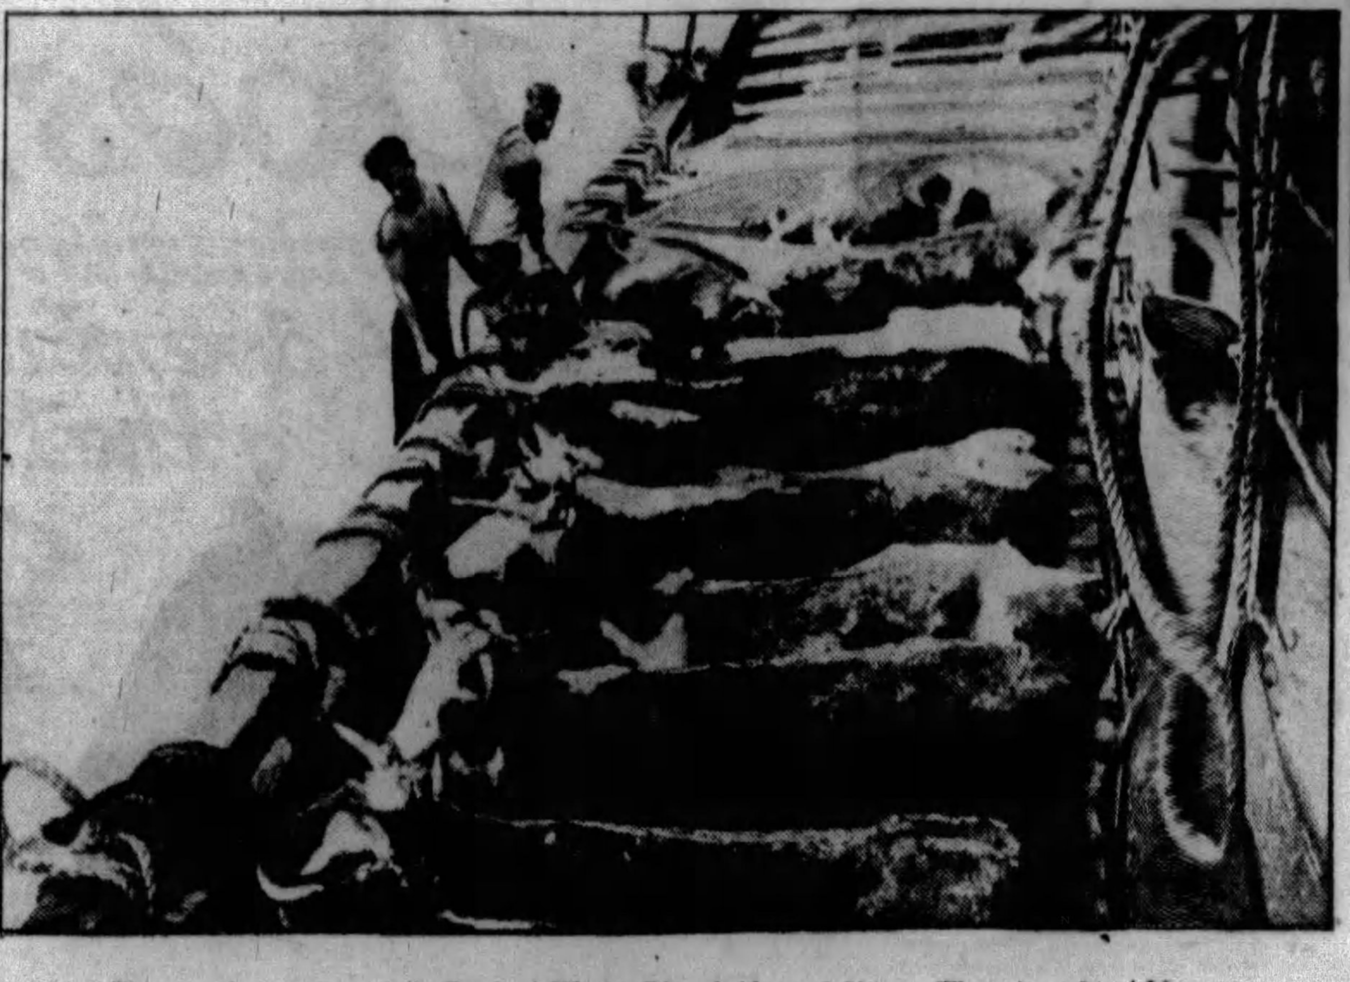
Cowboys of the Water.

The Cowboys of Hawaii Rope Their Steers and Drive Them Directly Into the Water on Occasions When the Transport Ships Are Anchored Sufficiently Near the Beach.

Because of the Shallowness of the Water at Kealakekua Bay, Hawaii, the Cattle Ships Remain Out in the Channel, While Small Boats Convoying Cows Are Towed Out With Rope and Capstan.



The Cattle Are Carefully Bathed When Placed Aboard Ship. They Are Lined Up at the Rail and Streams of Water Are Turned on Them.

Cattle Being Hoisted Out of the Water by Cranes and Stowed Away in Stalls for Shipment.

POPULAR conception of the cowboy pictures him in chaps, a two-gallon hat, flowing scarf, riding a spirited mustang and whirling an expert lariat while rounding up recalcitrant steers on the Western plains. As a character he had done much to advertise America via the movies and thrilling literature. Only in the Argentine does his foreign prototype exist—or so it is believed.

But there are cowboys in Hawaii—fearless riders, expert horsemen, who do not use six-shooters, who probably never heard of chaps, and whose skill is not limited to roundups. Their work, or rather, the most difficult part of their work, is done in the water. Totally unsung, the Hawaiian cowboy is really a remarkabe character and a highly important factor in the Hawaiian cattle-raising industry, which really ranks second only in economic importance in that country to the raising of sugar-cane.

Travelers seldom see these men. Few know that cattle-raising is carried on in Hawaii. That is because the plains in the region of Kealakekua Bay on the Island of Hawaii, are more than two hundred miles southeast of Oaha, on which Honolulu is situated. The bay is considerably off the tourist route.

The first cattle appeared in Hawaii in 1792 when George Vancouver presented a cow and a bull to Prince Kamehamcha and suggested that the splendid plains offered the finest sort of grazing. His idea was endorsed and from it a great industry has been developed.

Up until the time of shipment of cattle, the life and duties of the Hawaiian cowboy is very similar to that of the American cattle puncher. But then, the Hawaiian is up against a totally different and a vastly more difficult problem. Where the American punchers merely drive the cattle to pens near the railroad, and then into cattle cars for shipment to the stockyards, the Hawaiian puncher has to contend with the problem of getting his cattle aboard ship. Hence, he must become a very different sort of workman. His job is very complicated. It involves getting the cattle aboard a steamship or fleet of steamships that cannot be docked. The water at the shores of Kealakekua Bay is very shallow and large vessels must anchor half a mile from the land. The cowboys have found that driving the steers into the water and making them swim to the ship is out of the question. So they must tie a rope to the horns of each steer, and then while one mounted cowboy pulls, two others drive the animal into the water.

After ten steers have been thus driven as far as a heavy, broad-beamed boat, five are placed on each side with the ropes so fastened as to keep the heads above water during the long, forced swim. The boats are propelled by a cable attached to the windlass of the steamer, which starts to turn at a signal from the cowboys. When the boat with the swimming steers is brought alongside the steamer, another problem arises. There is no way to let a gangplank down, so the animals must be lifted separately by a crane to the deck. In order to lift them, the cowboys must place a sling under the body of each steer. This frequently necessitates expert swimming by the puncher. The animals are then hoisted aboard.

Ordinarily, it might be assumed, the cowboy's work ends with that procedure. But it doesn't. He is required to attend the cattle, in many instances throughout the week's voyage to San Francisco.

They are lined in stalls on the deck, and every day the cowboy must see that they are fed, after which he gives them a standing ablution with the ship's hose.

The real joy of the cowboy's life lies in the return trip, when he is free to do what he likes. He has a good time, like his American relative, while in town. But he never shoots up the hotel or rides into the post office, because he has neither horse nor gun with him on his holidays.

Europe's Most Beautiful Shoulders

Fraulein Ruth Neilson, the Viennese Beauty Who Has Been Declared the Possessor of the Most Beautiful Shoulders in Europe.

EUROPEAN beauty experts and proprietors of gymnastic institutions for keeping professional beauties in shape have agreed that one of the most common defects to be encountered in the physical tabulations of beautiful women is uneven or unshapely shoulders. This, it is said, is the natural result of an imperfect back, the muscles of which are not kept in trim, and which lose their firmness.

In all these beauty institutions, strenuous exercises are prescribed for the strengthening the back muscles, and thus indirectly rounding out the shoulders and giving them proper symmetry.

A great many of the women who patronize the institutions are artists' models. There is a wide demand for models with perfect figures, and as many of the sculptors specialize in busts, straight, perfect shoulders, being difficult to find, always bring a desirable remuneration to the model. Among the professional beauties of Europe it has been estimated by experts there are not more than thirty women whose shoulders are perfectly aligned and flawless. Among these is Fraulein Ruth Neilson, of Vienna, who, by unanimous vote among twelve leading sculptors, is given the distinction of possessing the most beautiful shoulders in Europe. Painters, too, have given her this distinction, and the result is that Fraulein Neilson is perhaps represented in more modern sculpture and a greater number of paintings than any other woman in Europe, although she is not a professional model, but a dancer.

Fraulein Neilson's shoulders, now that they have been acclaimed by the continent's most famous sculptors and painters, have made her an outstanding figure on the European stage. Before this new distinction she enjoyed only moderate success, although her beauty and her dancing grace found her steady work in playhouses all over Europe.

But now, wherever she goes, eager audiences fill the theatres in which she is billed to dance, not because they want to see her trip the light fantastic but because they want to look upon and admire the most beautiful shoulders in Europe.

The young woman bears her new distinction modestly and is liberal with advice to other women who beseige her with questions as to how they can acquire shoulders more nearly like hers. She tells them that Nature endowed her with a shapely physique, and that perhaps her new fame was a gift with which she had nothing to do. And then she explains that from childhood she has taken exceptional care of her body, spending much time in the open and in exercises intended to keep her in the pink of physical condition as well as to fit her for the profession she has chosen to follow.

Unlike many dancers, Fraulein Neilson did not concentrate her exercising to her legs, but paid quite as much attention to the rest of her body. And when she found she had tendency to round shoulders she devised a set of corrective exercises of her own. She practices these to this day.

More than a score of well-known sculptors and painters are trying to induce Fraulein Neilson to give up her stage work and devote her entire time to posing, but she has decided to stick to her dancing and give only such time as she can spare to sitting for statues and paintings that will preserve the likeness of her perfect shoulders.

China's Strange Ban on Low Necks

WITHIN a few years the women of China emancipated themselves in the matter of clothing, probably as a further manifestation of the new independence which wars and civil strife and Western influence have brought to the country. Gone are the picturesque and archaic kimonos, jackets, pantaloons, burdensome head-dresses and crippling shoes of the Chinese women. In their places are costumes frankly borrowed from the American flapper—and flapper customs as well. Chinese women, especially those in the metropolitan areas of Peking, Shanghai and Hong Kong wear American and French clothes, sport skirts, silk hose, broad shoes, and bob their hair. Instead of household drudgery, they spend their time in athletic contests, driving cars, teaching school, nursing the sick, flying planes, and in some instances women have formed military units.

There are at least half a dozen Chinese women air mail pilots. There are several hundred Chinese women actresses—engaging in a profession formerly exclusively that of men. The women no longer are married off at the whim of calculating parents but insist on romance and courtship and their individual rights.

But with all these changes, the Chinese woman, though she adopts a short skirt, bobs her hair and in other ways emulates the Western flapper, dares not wear a low-necked gown. For some mysterious reason, although French and American style-makers are flooding the Peking and Canton shops that have a strictly Chinese clientele with new creations, no one has as yet succeeded in finding approval of dresses that do not have high necks and a collar band. There is no official ban on low necks, yet there has never been an occasion when a Chinese woman appeared with throat bared and thus warranted disapproval. Evening gowns worn by Chinese women concede nothing in this respect, but, on the other hand, feature the high neck. And the result, particularly where flapperish costumes are worn, is quite bizarre. An otherwise snappy flapper costume with its material built up almost to the chin of the wearer seems, to the Occidental eye, strikingly incongruous.

It has been pointed out that perhaps Chinese women regard their necks as inferior, as regards looks, to the necks of European or American women. But this explanation is hardly tenable, since there are numerous Chinese beauties who have nothing to be sensitive about in this respect. Miss Olive Young, the movie star, is an example. At the Great Wall Motion Picture colony, an exclusively Chinese producing corporation on the shores of the Hwang P'u, there are scores of other beauties.

The high neck is simply a tradition, perhaps based upon some such superstition as that which persists among the women of Turkey. It may be associated with inherent modesty. In Turkey, where the women no longer wear the veil, there is a tendency among even the most liberal of the modern women to keep the back of their heads covered.

A New Machine That Forecasts Hereditary Traits of Animals and Humans

ONLY scientific specialists familiar with the intricacies of the Mendelian law have been able hitherto to foretell with any amount of precision what the hereditary traits, physical and otherwise, of an unborn creature will be. Now, with a mechanism which amounts to a synthetic brain, invented by R. R. Graves, of the Bureau of Dairy Industry at Washington, it is possible for anyone to determine in advance something about the constitution of an animal or a child that has not yet arrived on the earth.

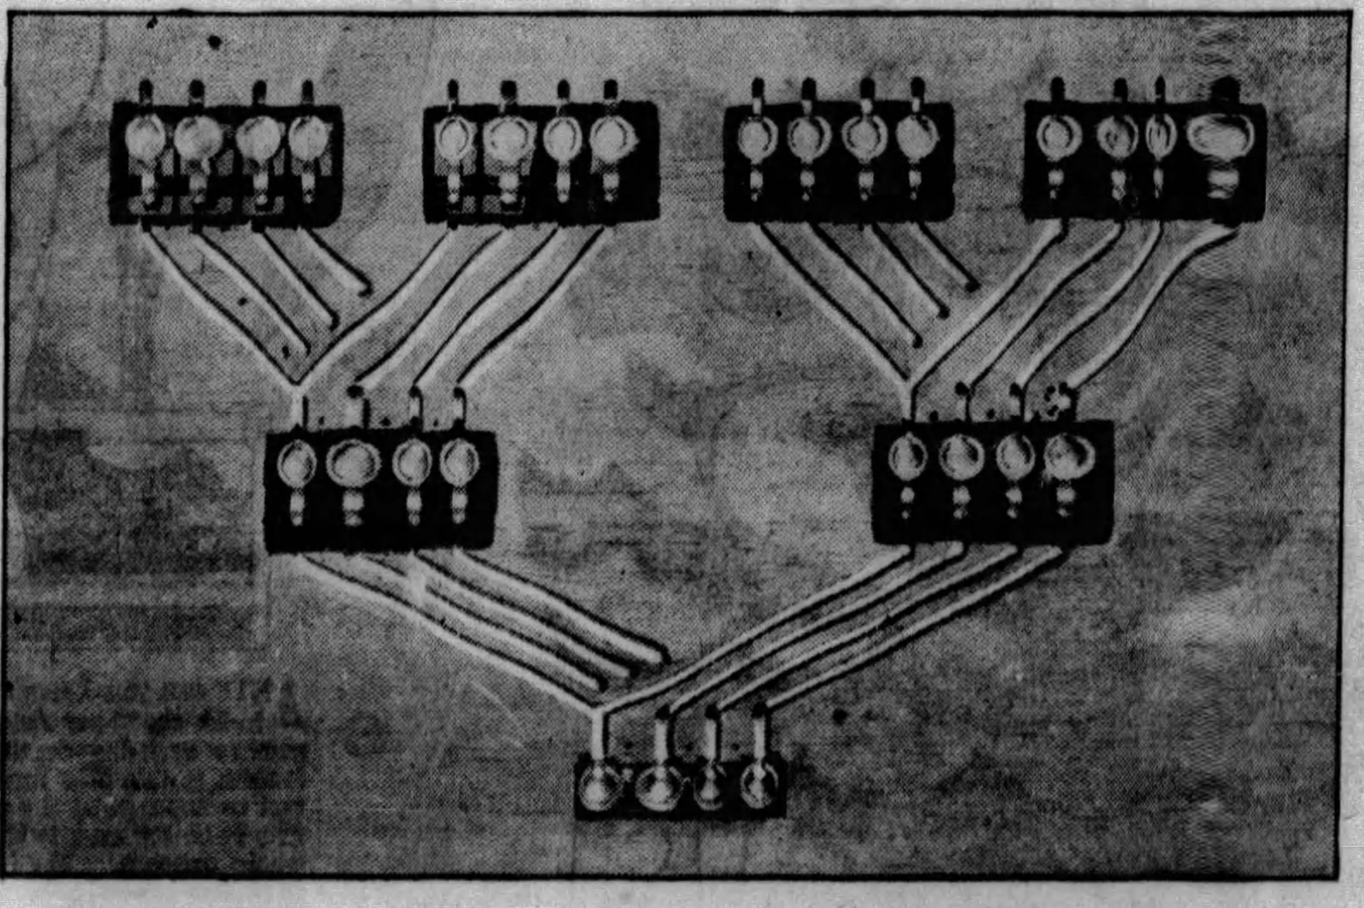
By this means, simply by dropping a collection of small colored balls into a series of cups, cattlemen can visualize what their future stock will be like and expectant parents and even grandparents can get a partial picture of their offspring.

The device consists of twenty-four cups. The cups are divided into three groups. A row of sixteen, divided into four groups, represents grandparents; below, two groups of four each represent parents. The remaining four represent the child. In operating the machine, four dominant characteristics are considered, so that thirty-two balls, each pair representing both a trait and a tendency, are used. Two balls are placed in each cup.

All the cups are connected with little chutes into which the balls drop when a crank is turned. By one turn of the crank, half the thirty-two balls are eliminated, and the remaining sixteen falling into the second group of cups represent the characteristics and tendencies of the parents. Again the crank is turned and only eight balls remain. These fall into four cups which provide the picture of the unborn.

The machine is called the herediscope and was originally developed for predetermining the hereditary traits of dairy cattle, but its operation is equally accurate where human beings are concerned. It functions on the principle that certain qualities, physical and mental, pass from people to their children according to a definite law.

Recently Mr. Graves demonstrated the herediscope, covering three generations. He selected four hypothetical grandparents. The characteristics involved were the color of the hair, the eyes, the condition of the mind, and musical ability. It was pointed out that in the case of simple characteristics such as eye and hair pigmentation these were to be considered as units. But regarding physical strength and more complex characteristics, these were to be viewed as combinations of units. It was further explained that nature required normality to dominate wherever possible while abnormality persisted only when it was pronounced.



The Herediscope, a Veritable Gambling Machine of Fate, Invented for Forecasting by Mechanical Means the Hereditary Traits That Will Prevail in Animals or Human Beings.

The grandparents were chosen thus:

No. 1, red hair, dark eyes, and a recessive to blue character. Not musically inclined. Two red balls were placed in one cup, a black and a blue one in another, and two denoting a normal mind in the third, and two negatively tinted ones in the fourth. If there had been any doubt as to the mental normality, two unlike balls would have been put in, but according to the law normality would have dominated.

No. 2, dark hair, dark eyes, normal mind, but with a recessive to feeble-mindedness and no musical ability.

No. 3, dark hair, with a recessive to red; blue eyes, normal mind and no musical ability.

No. 4, dark hair, recessive to red; dark eyes, with a recessive to blue, normal mind and musical ability.

The crank was turned and the characteristics which had been transmitted to the group representing the parents were examined.

The result:

First parent—Child of the first two grandparents; dark hair, dark eyes, normal mind with a recessive to feeble-mindedness and musical ability.

Second parent—Child of the second two grandparents; dark hair, blue eyes, normal mind, no musical ability, but with a recession toward it.

The characteristics eventually transmitted to the child were: Dark hair, dark eyes, with a recessive toward blue, normal mind, but a recessive to feeble-mindedness and musical ability.

Feeble-mindedness and blue eyes, recessive in the family for three generations still were running in the blood, awaiting only a favorable opportunity to crop out. The youngster, however, can transmit nothing but dark hair and musical ability.

The analysis showed that Grandparent No. 1 had transmitted red hair and blue eyes and normality; No. 2 had transmitted dark hair and dark eyes and feeble-mindedness; No. 3 had contributed dark hair, blue eyes and feeble-mindedness, and No. 4 had given red hair, blue eyes, normality and musical ability. The machine had divided and dispensed these traits in the same manner that nature does.

Holland Instead of Paris for Fashionable Easy Divorces

The Matrimonial Miseries of Millicent Rogers' Parents, Which Started With Disagreement Over Count Salm, Laid Before the Utrecht Court Because of Many Advantages the Lawyers Have Discovered

Frances Goodrich, the American Actress and Third Wife of Hendrik Willem Van Loon, Who Discovered the Ease With Which Divorces Could Be Obtained in Holland, His Native Land.

An Exquisite Sketch by Olive Snell, the Distinguished English Painter, of Millicent Rogers, Formerly Countess Salm, and Now Senora Arturo Remos.

Col. H. H. Rogers, as He Appeared a Few Years Ago on His Return From Military Service in France.

Count Salm von Hoogstraeten.

The New Mrs. H. H. Rogers, Who Was Formerly Mrs. Basil Miles.

AMSTERDAM, July 25.

EUROPE is still "all steamed up" over the H. H. Rogers divorce, not because Colonel Rogers has just consummated his divorce by marrying the lovely Mrs. Basil Miles, or because Count Salm von Hoogstraeten might regain custody of his child as well as some of the Rogers millions he didn't get from Millicent by marrying Mrs. Rogers—no, it is because that divorce means the passing of a lucrative industry from one country to another.

Paris has just realized that it has lost its monopoly of the very profitable American divorce industry to its thrifty little neighbor, the Kingdom of Holland.

The Dutch have always enjoyed as easy divorce laws as the French, but wealthy divorce-minded Americans did not know that Amsterdam was just as good a de-spousing station as Paris, and there was no dignified way of calling it to their attention. Holland has advertised its canals, cheeses and windmills, but it could not very well advertise its divorce mills. Even Russia, where a divorce can be had in five minutes and for five dollars, doesn't do that.

To get that coveted business some very rich and important American would have to discover and patronize little Holland's excellent divorce service and set the style. And that is the very thing that happened recently when Mrs. H. H. Rogers, wife of the Standard Oil millionaire, counted as one of America's ten richest men, got a divorce from her husband as an afterclap of their daughter Millicent's ill-starred romance with Count Salm von Hoogstraeten.

That fact mentioned in the American papers was enough. Every wife who was thinking of being de-husbanded this Summer knew at once that the smartest, quickest and in every other way best place must be where Mr. and Mrs. Rogers got the job done. The Rogers family would no more be serviced at the second-best divorce mill than they would be found at the second-best hotel or traveling on a second-class liner.

At once the divorce specialists at Paris and their correspondent lawyers, the "divorce go-getters" in the U. S. A., began to receive queries from uneasy American husbands and wives. "How much will it cost and what do we have to do to get one of these new Rogers Dutch divorces?" was the gist of the letters.

The answers were pleasant reading for those ambitious to improve themselves matrimonially. It would cost no more than a French divorce and could be obtained as quickly as the average in the good old days of quantity production in the Paris mill. In fact, it was practically the same game, based on the same laws, the Code Napoleon.

True, a husband or wife could be shed quicker and cheaper in Mexico, but, like the Russian divorce, it was not much good in other countries. American husbands especially were cautioned against Mexican divorces. Wives might divorce them all over again in the courts of the United States and collect a second helping of alimony. Reno would grant as nice a divorce as anybody could ask, but one had to reside in Nevada six months and, besides, the newspapers were free to print anything interesting in the complaint or testimony.

On the other hand, Holland's divorce, like its financial credit, is Grade A the world over. The divorce aspirant needs only reside there "permanently" two months and the papers are not permitted to print anything except to name the cause for which it was granted—for instance in the Rogers case, infidelity—and no mention of where, when or with whom.

What makes the American divorce traffic so profitable is not alone the high fees paid to the native lawyers who present the case to the learned judges. These gentlmen in turn have all the evidence prepared and presented to them by the American lawyers, who, however, have no standing in the courts. Fees are but small drops in the big river of dollars which the rich American divorce-seekers used to spend at the hotels and shops of Paris and which are now going into the coffers of the pleased burghers of Amsterdam and Utrecht. Holland thriftily insists that the complainant, almost invariably the woman and therefore the "best spender," must remain in the Kingdom at least two months.

With her, of course, are some of her wealthy friends, helping her spend in advance part of the alimony that is coming, and often her next husband, who is in the status of fiance and therefore in his most generous, spending mood. All the world loves a lover, but European tradesmen love him best of all.

While Mrs. Rogers was a "permanent" resident of Utrecht the necessary time to be a divorce candidate in good standing, her husband also took residence in a neighboring town in order to put himself under the court's jurisdiction and make the divorce doubly lawyer-proof. That brought his friends into Holland, including, it is said, the fascinating widow, Mrs. Basil Miles. It was freely prophesied that Mr. Rogers would promptly marry Mrs. Miles, and this he has just done at Paris.

Among the friends in attendance on Mrs. Rogers was Count Salm, her former son-in-law and father of her grandson, Peter, whom her daughter handed to her mother when Millicent married her second husband, Arturo Peralto Ramos, the wealthy and handsome Argentine. Though the Count is 20 years younger than Mrs. Rogers, the same prophets forecast that she was to be the next Countess Salm von Hoogstraeten. This has been vehemently denied by the divorcee who maintains that her feelings for the young man are purely motherly, sympathetic and platonic.

Count Salm is not a heavy spender himself. All he got for marrying the $40,000,000 Standard Oil heiress, giving her a divorce and the custody of the child which she handed to her mother, was $300,000 gross, which was presumably cut in half by legal exactions and expenses.

The first crack in the Parisian divorce monopoly appeared two years ago when there was a scandal and investigation after which things were no longer so pleasant and easy. As usual with monopolies, the thing had been overdone. It got so that the very rich and extravagant, who didn't care what it cost, could land in Cherbourg, run up to Paris and get divorced almost between boats.

Therefore, there was an investigation made by the Ministry of Justice and a number of French advocates and court attaches were suspended or reprimanded. It was found that Mrs. Julian Livingston Allen, whose first husband was Charles Dillingham, the theatrical producer, had been granted a divorce from the "Millionaire Kid," who is vice-president of the Bankers Trust Co. of Paris, six days after applying.

Colonel Rogers' own daughter, Millicent, received her divorce from Count Salm in seven days. Mae Murray got her decree from Robert Z. Leonard after a sixteen-day sojourn in France.

The former Alice Silverthorne of Chicago, who shot her admirer, Raymond de Trafford, obtained a divorce from Count Frederick de Janze in one month. Mrs. William Rhinelander Stewart, formerly Laura Mary Biddle, however, was freed after a wait of two and one-half months.

Other American divorces denounced in the Ministry of Justice investigation were those of Marilyn Miller and Jack Pickford and of Constance Bennett from Philip Plant, the "10,000,000 heir." So great was the indignation of the French over the revelations of quick American divorces that Mrs. William Hayward, who had established a residence in Paris to obtain a divorce from Colonel Hayward, was forced to abandon her petition for the time being. Other Americans gave up their plans for French divorces until the storm was over.

Curiously enough, credit for making known to the world in general and to Mrs. Rogers in particular the merits of the Dutch divorce courts is given to Hendrik Willem Van Loon, the historian, whose own very "loony" marriages and divorces are very much in the news. While the third Mrs. Van Loon, better known as Frances Goodrich, actress, is trying to divorce him in the New York courts, the writer is said to be living on the island of Walcheren, off the coast of his native Holland, with Helen Criswell, who had been Mrs. Van Loon Number 2 before she divorced him in Paris just as he was divorcing her in Mexico.

The breach between the Rogers started in 1924, when their daughter, Millicent, without warning, married Count Salm, an impecunious Austrian nobleman. Mrs. Rogers welcomed a count in the family, but Colonel Rogers wouldn't have a thing to do with him. The couple soon separated and Attorney Adrian Larkin was sent to Paris by Papa Rogers to arrange everything. He did, and for $300,000 Salm consented to a divorce. It was a bargain.

Mrs. Rogers never forgave her husband's drastic action with Count Salm. She would have liked to have been able to casually mention to her friends "my son-in-law, Count Salm von Hoogstraeten." Of course, she could still say "my ex-son-in-law," but that didn't sound so good.

After the divorce she parted company with the Colonel. When he occupied the New York residence she went to the Southampton, L. I., estate or abroad. When Colonel Rogers went to Southampton, she would be in New York or Paris.

In Paris she invariably ran across Count Salm and was often seen in his company. On her latest trip to Paris for her divorce, it was reported from the French capital that the ex-son-in-law was one of the first to greet her. Despite the disparity in their ages, the Parisian gossipers have already coupled their names in another international romance.

The new Mrs. Rogers is as lively and interesting as she is beautiful. The daughter of the late Alexander von Braun of Budapest, she divorced her first husband, Peabody Savell, a wealthy engineer of New York and Atlanta, Georgia. During her first matrimonial stages she often appeared in the news. Once as she was reporting to the Paris police the theft of a $100,000 necklace, Mr. Savell entered the station and listened with growing amazement.

"Who gave you that?" he finally interrupted.

Probably she explained to him later or possibly it may have had some connection with their subsequent divorce. Her wedding to Basil Miles was a brilliant affair, attended by Ambassador Herrick and William Phillips, American Ambassador to Belgium, and man other notables. Mr. Miles was a m of great wealth and prominence in international affairs. Among oth things he was American Administrati Commissioner at the Internation Chamber of Commerce and just afte the war in charge of the Military and Civil Relief of Germans and Austrians in Russia. He died in 1928.

It has been the new bride's custom to rule her husbands with a rather iron hand. On a railroad journey from Paris to Cannes, the cruel conductor would not allow Mrs. Miles' dog in her stateroom, so she rode all the way in the baggage car to keep it from being lonesome. Also she forced Mr. Miles to ride there with her.

Mr. Rogers, used to being the head of the family, may find it necessary to make some readjustments. The Colonel's father, as John D. Rockefeller's right-hand man, helped found the American oil industry and now his son has done as much for the Dutch divorce business. But to France, it is an unfriendly act.

Her Tragedy Just Like That of Poor Little Madame Butterfly

CHO-CHO-SAN, the luckless heroine of Puccini's opera, "Madame Butterfly," slipped behind a screen and stabbed herself with her father's sword, when she realized that her American sweetheart, "Lieutenant Pinkerton, U. S. N.," had cast her off.

Marie Kunitomo, the daughter of a well-to-do Japanese physician, practising in Denver, Colo., took her father's revolver and sent a bullet crashing through her heart when "Jimmy" Lynch, her handsome fire-fighting husband-to-be, deserted her on the very eve of their wedding.

Like the women of her race, Marie cherished a high sense of honor. To her, as with Butterfly, to be jilted was worse than death, and finding herself unable to withstand what to her was an impossible situation, she chose suicide to living on without the man she loved.

Marie had known and liked Jimmy Lynch ever since they attended the same parish school. Day after day, Jimmy had carried the books of the little girl whose eyes slanted up at the corners and had either ignored or beaten up the boys who hooted and jeered at the rather unusual schoolday romance.

Jimmy quit school and went to work, but the friendship continued. Marie was graduated with high honors and went on to Denver University. Jimmy, grown into a husky young man, passed the civil service examination that won him a place in the Denver fire department.

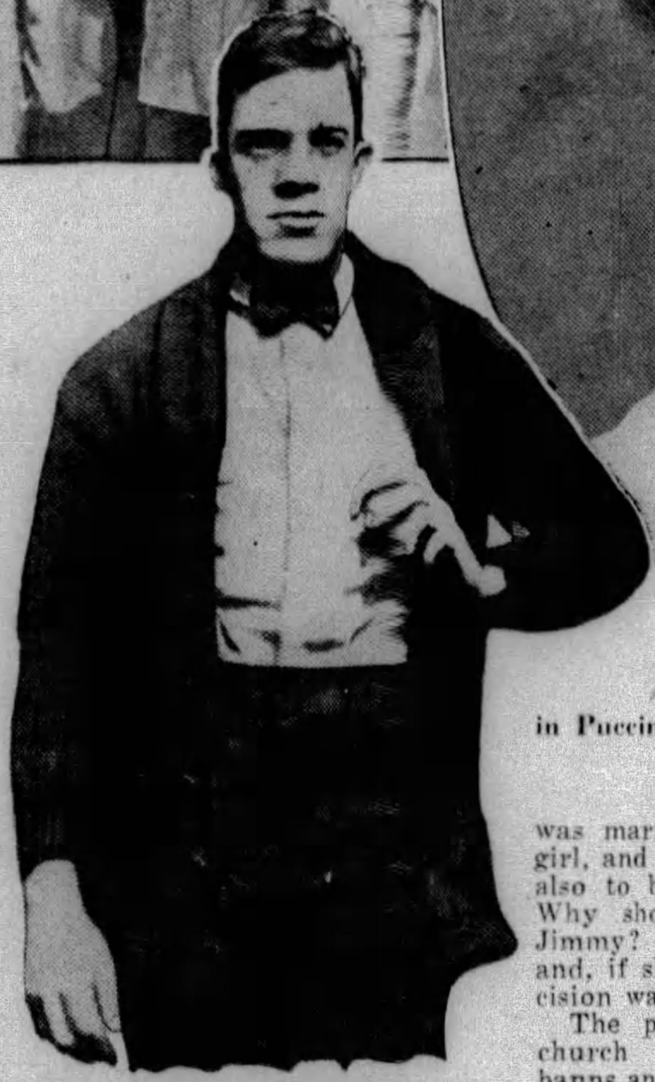
It made no difference to Marie that Jimmy Lynch was only a city employe, or that he earned a small salary. It made no difference to her that her father's father had been "somebody" over in Japan, or that her uncle governs a big province in the land of cherry blossoms. And when she received her diploma from the university and secured a well paid position as laboratory technician in the Presbyterian Hospital, she did not talk of a career. The big interest in her life was Jimmy Lynch and she was never so happy as on their occasional evenings together.

The Body of Marie Kunitomo Being Carried From the Church in Which She Expected to Marry the Fire-fighting Hero Who Deserted Her on the Eve of Their Wedding.

And, from all appearances, Jimmy had never had eyes for another girl since the days when he used to carry Marie's books home from school. She was, after all, very much his kind of girl, in spite of her Oriental cast of features, which, to him, made her only the more fascinating.

Marie's mother was Irish, and the girl had embraced the Roman Catholic faith. There was no religious bar to her marriage with Jimmy Lynch, and when he asked her to become his wife she promptly and happily said, "Yes."

With typical Oriental obedience, Marie humbly asked her father's permission to change her name from Kunitomo to Lynch. Dr. Kunitomo, having adopted the ways of the western world, did not demur. He himself had married a white woman, and his wedded life had been happy. His son was married to an American girl, and that romance seemed also to be running smoothly. Why shouldn't Marie marry Jimmy? He was a fine boy and, if she loved him, the decision was up to her.



"Jimmy" Lynch, the Denver Fireman, Whose Sudden Disappearance Sent Marie Kunitomo to Her Grave.

Demure Marie Kunitomo, Who, Like Madame Butterfly in Puccini's Famous Opera, Could Not Bear to Live When Her Lover Decided Not to Marry Her.

The pastor of the parish church read the marriage banns and Jimmy accompanied Marie on several pre-nuptial shopping expeditions while the girl selected her wedding finery. Jimmy arranged for a two weeks' vacation from his duties as a fireman, and Dr. and Mrs. Kunitomo sent out 300 invitations announcing the impending marriage of their daughter Marie to James Lynch.

Presents began to arrive at the Kunitomo home and Marie was as happy as Cho-Cho-San could possibly have been at the prospect of becoming the wife of "Lieutenant Pinkerton, U. S. N."

The day before that set for the wedding Marie telephoned the Lynch home to ask Jimmy if he had attended to all the details entrusted to him. A curt feminine voice told her that Jimmy wasn't home and that he wouldn't be home for awhile. He had gone away. He was not going to marry her and she might as well know it.

In a flash Marie realized what had happened. Like poor little Cho-Cho-San, her man was gone and there would be no wedding on the morrow. What about her wedding gown and all the presents? What about her proud parents? What about her heart?

As her trembling hand placed the receiver back on the hook, the words etched on the blade of the sharp sword of Cho-Cho-San's father may have burned in the blur before her eyes: "Die with honor when you can no longer live with honor."

Her father had no sword, but he had a revolver. A few moments later Marie Kunitomo slipped quietly from the house bright with decorations for her wedding reception and made her way to the secluded spot where she and Jimmy had often held their sweet trysts. And there passersby found her. When they lifted her body, a framed photograph of her Jimmy, dressed in his fireman's uniform, fell from her lap.

Just before she sent a bullet crashing through her heart, Marie Kunitomo had scribbled a farewell note to her mother. It read: "Mother—I am through. There is nothing left for me. My Jim is gone. Return my presents and bury me in my wedding gown."

And they did, from the church where she and her Jimmy were to have been married the day before. Thus did unhappy Marie Kunitomo find peace and honor by following the tragic* example of poor Butterfly.

Parking Towers to Solve Metropolitan Traffic Problem

WIDE WORLD Photo.

Sixteen-car Parking Tower at Sandusky, Ohio, a Space-saving Idea That Will Be Adopted in Many Large Cities to Help Solve Their Increasing Traffic Problems.

NEW YORK, Chicago and other of America's large cities, are perplexed by the ever increasing problem of traffic congestion. The city fathers of populous Manhattan, watching the unending stream of automobiles in their busy thoroughfares, are talking of tunnels and double-decked streets to meet the situation, and Chicago has already built one double-decked street, which has helped its particular problem but little.

The ablest engineers in the country are studying the situation and have submitted many ideas purporting to thin out the traffic in congested areas, but none of them seems to have hit upon any more practical plan for parking automobiles than J. E. Morton, Sandusky, Ohio, engineer and inventor.

He devised what he calls a parking tower and one of these is already in operation in Sandusky. The tower occupies no more ground space than the average two-car garage, but it houses sixteen automobiles and can be easily operated by one man.

The ingenious mechanism inside the tower is relatively simple, being an endless chain of eight two-car platforms made of heavy steel. These platforms are moved up and down inside a steel framework by an electric motor.

The platforms, one after another, are brought level with the ground-floor entrance and as soon as two cars have been driven on each platform, the motor moves the next platform into place until the tower is filled to its capacity of sixteen machines.

The demonstrations of this tower indicate that it is entirely practical, and its inventor claims that the same principle can be used efficiently in much higher towers with a capacity of 60 automobiles.

Engineers who have studied the working of the Sandusky parking tower have expressed the opinion that such buildings erected at strategic points in large cities would do much to clear the streets of parked cars and, temporarily at least, partially solve the traffic problem.

The great advantage of such towers in cities is the fact that so little ground is needed for their erection, and many such towers could be sandwiched in between other buildings and on small vacant lots. It has even been suggested that Engineer Morton's clever idea can be worked out in modern office buildings, so that tenants may park their cars in towers that are an integral part of the building.

Builders of apartment buildings and hotels are also giving careful thought to the parking tower, with a view to incorporating the device in structures that find it advantageous to have garage facilities as close to them as possible.

The cost of erecting a parking tower is not prohibitive, for it can be made of reinforced concrete, and the endless chain mechanism, operated by an electric motor, is but little more expensive than the usual type of elevator now in use in public garages.

Photographing the Discharge of a Shotgun and What Happens Afterward

LONDON.

ONE of the most interesting displays at the recent annual exhibition of the Royal Photographic Society of Great Britain was a series of photographs taken by Philip P. Quayle, picturing the discharge of a shotgun and what happens afterwards.

The first photograph shows what happened at the very instant of discharge, just after the charge had left the muzzle of the gun. The outrushing gas is shown still impinging on the base wads and accelerating the charge. Just ahead of the charge the shot wad is shown. The heavy line, roughly oval in shape, is a sound-wave generated by the release of the powder gas as the felt wads leave the muzzle.

In the second photograph the picture was taken a fraction of a second after the discharge. The shot charge in this photograph is shown about four inches out from the muzzle. The charge is still well together, with the base wads still in place. The sound-wave shown at the muzzle in the first picture has now attained a diameter of over a foot. The top shot wad is seen just ahead of the charge, and is partially turned into the plane of the paper by the outrushing powder gas.

The third picture shows the shot charge slightly more than a foot out from the muzzle, with the components fairly well separated. As the shot gets further away the components separate still more, spreading out in the shape of a cone. With the shotgun used for the pictures, a 12-gauge gun, the length of the average shot charge at forty yards, as determined by Mr. Quayle from full-sized photographs, is from twelve to thirteen feet.

Modern photography has been used to photograph even bullets coming from high-power rifles. What a feat of science this is may be seen when it is considered that a bullet from the average sporting rifle comes out at a speed of thirty miles per minute, and from a German Mannlicher rifle at forty-five miles per minute. The maximum velocity of a bullet from a Ross Canadian rifle, according to tests made, is slightly over forty-seven miles per minute.

The shotgun used by Mr. Quayle for his photographs is the most modern and finest specimen of shotgun made today, hardly recognizable as the descendant of the first fowling pieces used about 1580 for shooting at flying birds. These were the blunderbusses, which had yawning barrels loaded with small shot or bits of metal and stone. Out of these grew the modern shotgun, whose development followed closely that of the musket and rifle.

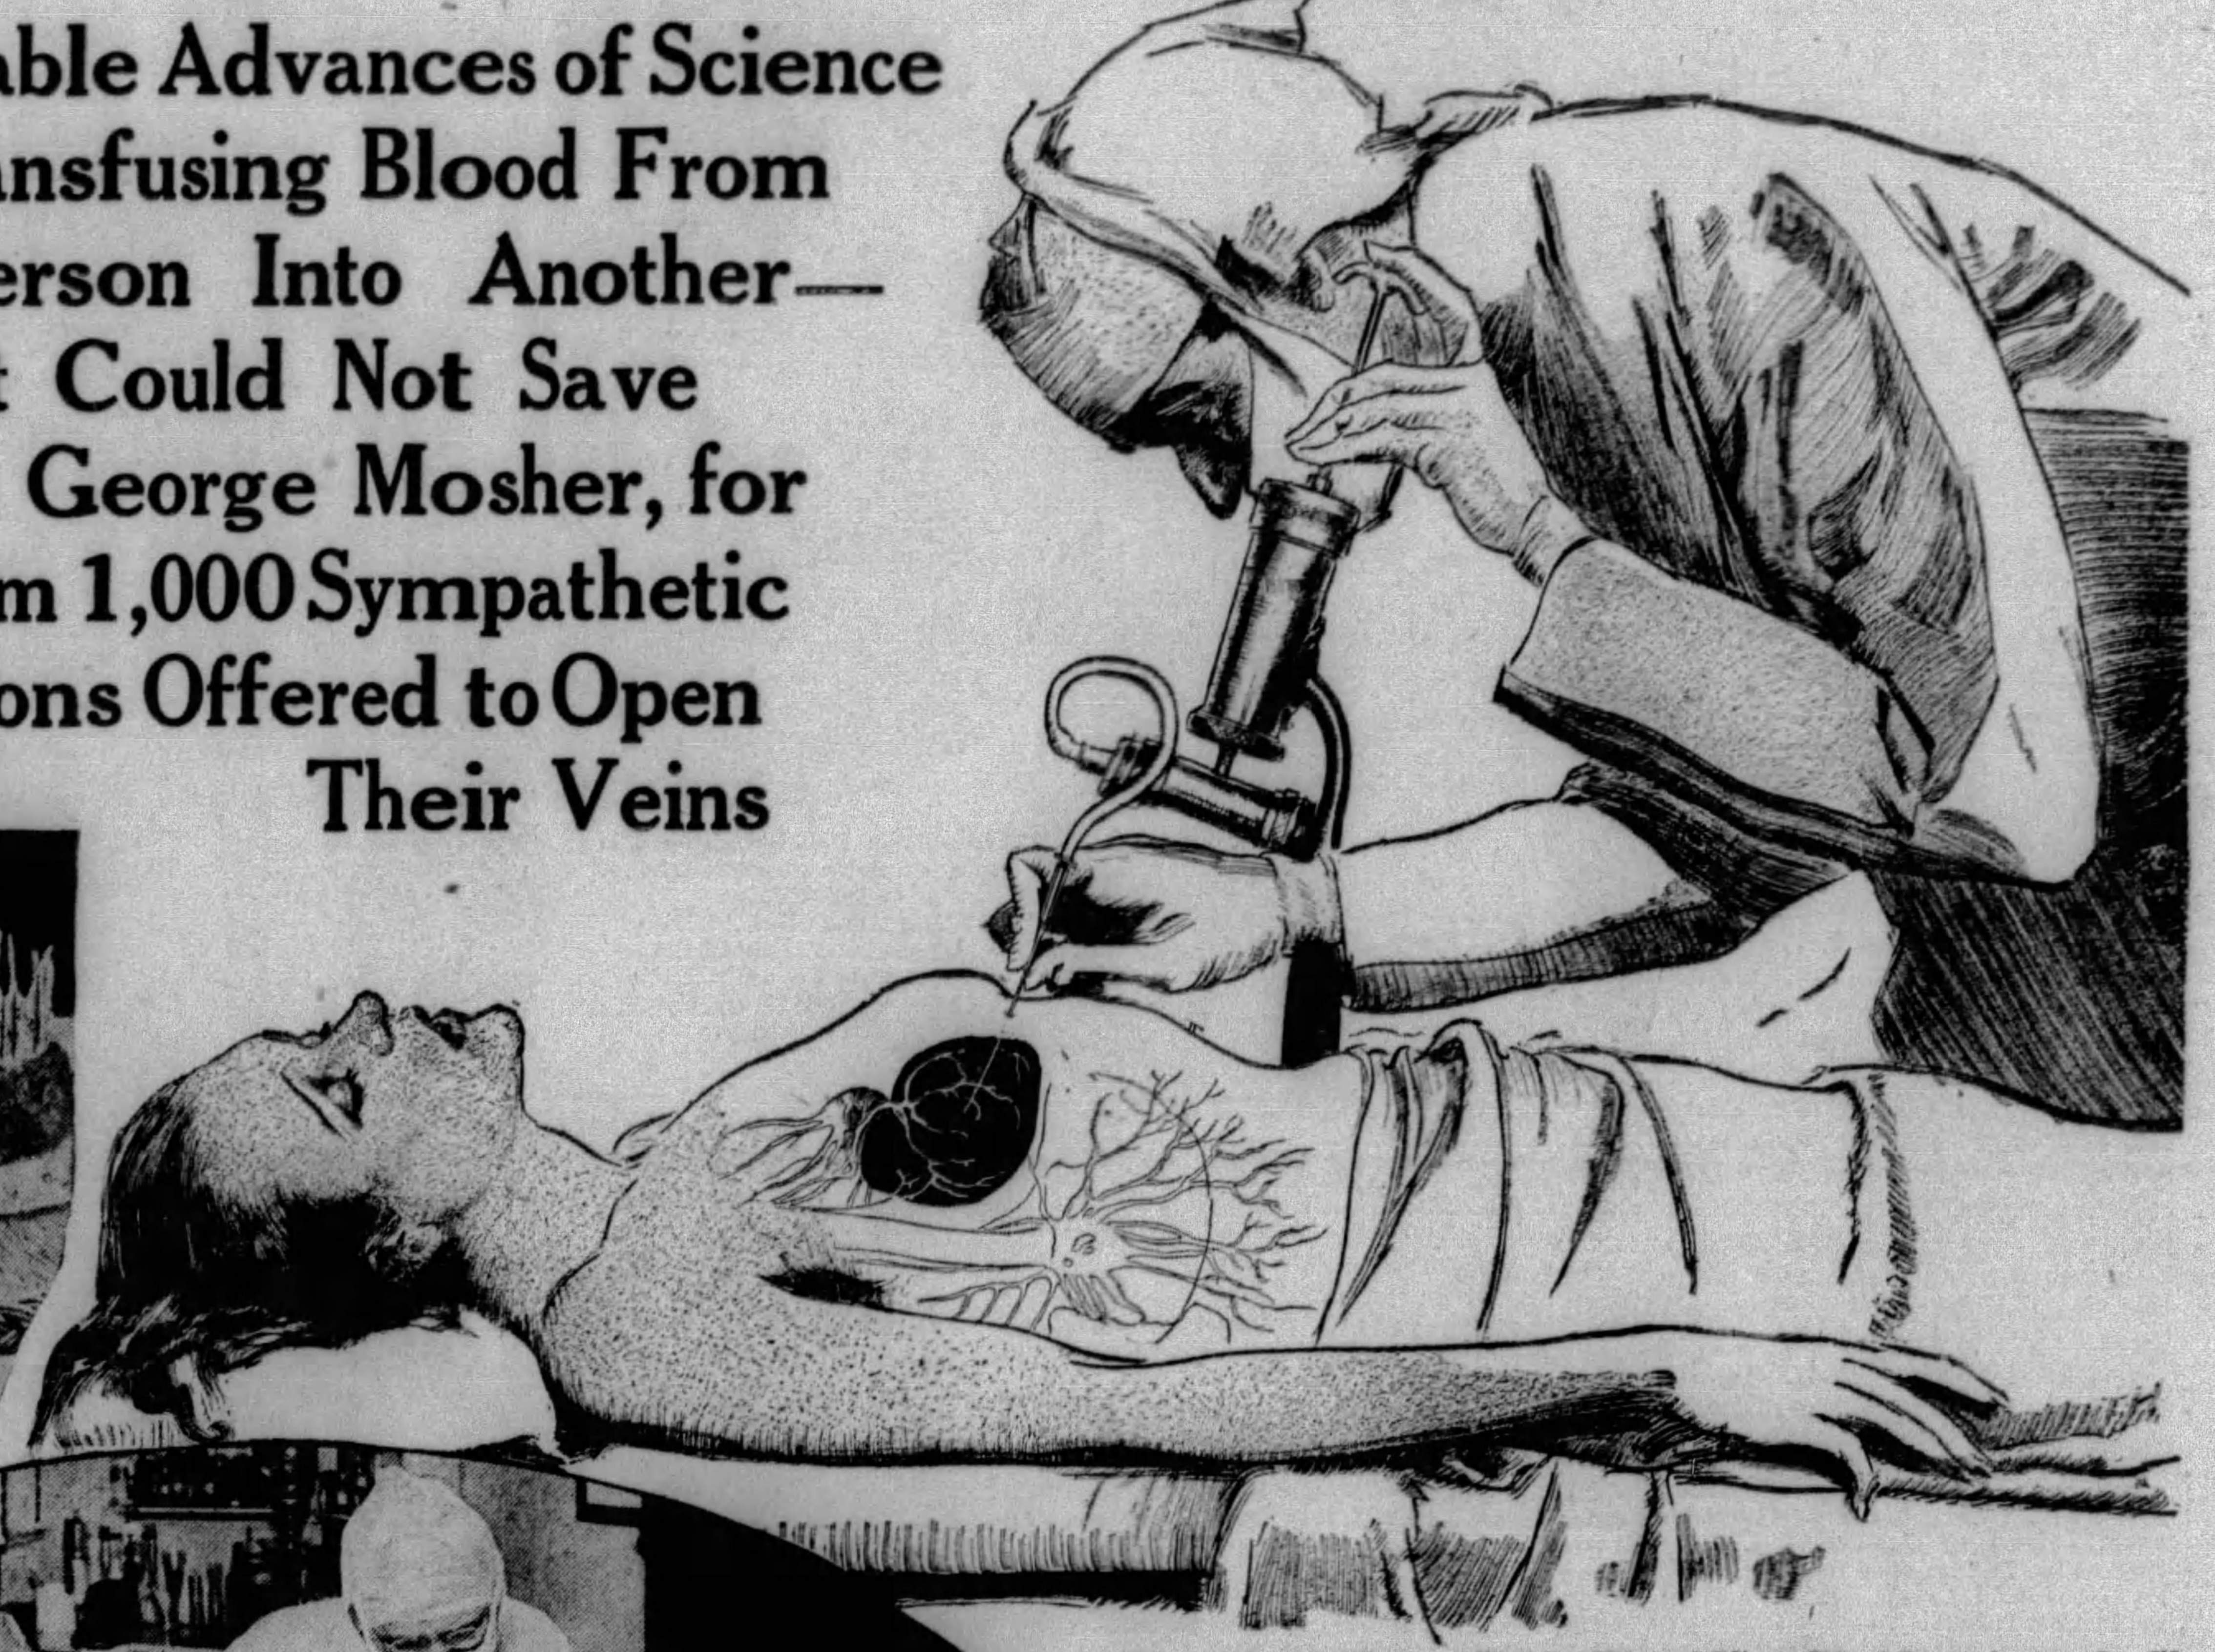
Injected the Life-Giving Blood Into the Dying Girl's Heart

Remarkable Advances of Science in Transfusing Blood From One Person Into Another—but Could Not Save Little George Mosher, for Whom 1,000 Sympathetic Persons Offered to Open Their Veins

John D. Rockefeller, Cutting His Ninetieth Birthday Cake—And If Mr. Rockefeller Lives Five Years Longer, Science May Have Made Such Advances in Blood Transfusion That He Will Be Enabled to Live Long Enough to Cut Twenty More Birthday Cakes.



Prof. Achard's Patient Was So Wasted That Blood Transfusion Could Not Be Made Through the Veins, and the Doctor Plunged the Hollow Needle of a Syringe Through Her Breast and Into Her Heart, and Thus Injected the Life-Giving Fluid Straight Into the Organ, Which Continued Pumping It Through the Body. And His Patient Recovered!

Little George Mosher, Whose Bl[illegible]d Was Replenished Ten Separate Times From the Veins of Healthy People, but Whose Life Could Not Be Saved.

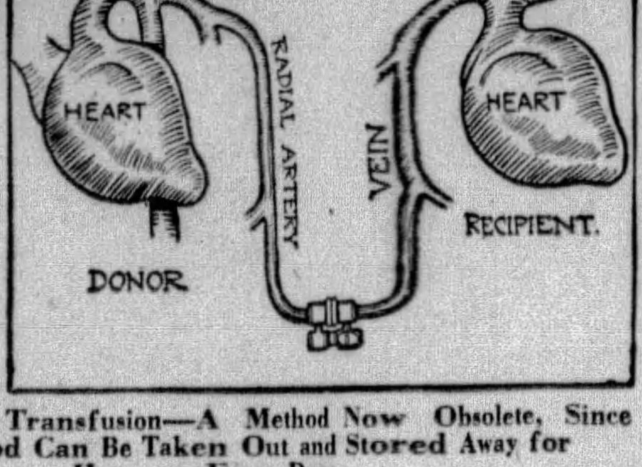

Diagram Showing the Old Method of Linking Up the Blood Vessels of the Two Persons to Effect Blood Transfusion—A Method Now Obsolete, Since Human Blood Can Be Taken Out and Stored Away for Hours, or Even Days.

FICTION must move fast nowadays to keep ahead of fact. A few years ago not many fiction writers would have been daring enough to imagine a surgeon draining off his patient's blood in order to renovate it chemically and put it back again. Yet that has been done.

Human blood has been stored for hours, or even days, in germ-free chambers, kept at constant temperature, and then injected into the veins of some person whom the blood's original owner had never seen.

In a European hospital a few weeks ago the blood of a young girl, who had been killed in an accident, was drawn from the dead body and injected into another patient who was at the point of death, but recovered, thanks to the dead girl's blood.

In Chicago a pint of blood was taken from a man in one hospital, carried to another hospital a mile away and injected into the body of his sister, again with life-saving result.

In the village of Anzago in Northern Italy Dr. Giocondo Protti is curing old age by injections of new blood, less, at present at least, to prolong life beyond its appointed term, than to correct the disorders of glands or of other bodily structures which cause premature old age while the patient is still young enough to possess, were he in normal condition, a reasonable degree of vigor. The blood injections are proving much more useful, Dr. Protti believes, than the various gland operations and injections so much heralded in previous years.

In Paris a patient of Professor Achard lay at the point of death from typhoid fever. So nearly dead was she that her veins were collapsed and empty. New blood was at hand for injection, but the usual needle could not be got to deliver its stream of fluid into the flabby veins. The surgeon was not dismayed. Choosing a long, sharp, hollow needle, he thrust it directly into the dying woman's heart.

Only a few years ago surgeons would have been unwilling even to touch the heart of a living human being. The slightest shock to that organ might result, they believed, in stopping its beats and causing death. Now they know that the heart is far too hardy for that. Stab wounds into the heart have been sewed up successfully. Bullets have been probed for and cut out of the heart tissues while the second by second beats of the injured organ went on as usual. Drugs are injected into the muscles of the heart through slender hypodermic needles, or even into the cavities of the heart where the blood is pumped. By injecting the powerful stimulant called adrenaline in this manner, a few individuals apparently have been brought back to life and health.

Just to the left of the breast bone, in the space between two of the ribs, is a spot where the heart is not far underneath the surface of the chest. That is one of the spots where physicians listen most closely with their stethoscopes to hear the beats or clicks or rumbles of the heart valves and of the blood coursing through them; sounds that tell much about how the heart is working. That thin, open spot—highly vulnerable, as ancient assassins well knew, to a thin stiletto or to any other weapon—was the spot selected by Professor Achard for his life-saving injection. With the needle of his blood-filled syringe actually in the heart, he injected slowly nearly a full pint of the new blood.

Withdrawing the needle was a simple matter. The tiny hole in the heart muscle closed of itself without leakage, as such small heart wounds usually do. The same was true of the tiny puncture in the fluid-filled sack that surrounds the heart and lubricates its motions. Through the chest wall there was but a tiny puncture like a pin prick. Small, punctured wounds like this seldom make trouble anywhere. Meanwhile the heart was pumping its new blood out through the body to fill the relaxed veins and to re-establish circulation in the congested arteries. Blood had been provided at the only spot in the collapsed system where it could have been inserted, much as a farmer pours in water to prime a pump. Within a few weeks the subject of this remarkable operation was well. Without Professor Achard's skill and daring she would have been dead.

These are only a few of the marvelous successes which physicians are winning every day in the year in hospitals all over the world by modern developments in the methods of blood transfusion.

A fourteen-year-old boy named George Mosher, lay dying, a few weeks ago, in a hospital on Staten Island, near New York City. His illness was at first believed to be the rare disease called kala-azar, common in India and Egypt, but so seldom encountered in the United States that few American physicians have ever seen a case of it. The germ of this disease enters the blood and destroys it. Afterward the germ was exonerated, the boy's disease being diagnosed as a still rarer and even more mysterious condition in which some natural disorder of the blood itself, or the blood-making machinery of the body, goes wrong and destroys the blood as completely as the germ would do. "Anemia" is the physician's name for a lack of the red blood corpuscles due to any cause, even to excessive bleeding. The disease of young George Mosher turned out to be a special kind of anemia of unknown cause and almost always fatal.

In any case, the only hope for the boy was new blood, provided by transfusion. But no money was available to buy blood and the free supplies had been exhausted. It seemed that George Mosher would have to die.

The story reached the New York newspapers. That great metropolis, often called cold-hearted, did as it has done so often before. Thousands of dollars poured into the hospital from people who had known nothing of George Mosher, but who wanted to help him live if money could do it. But none of the money was necessary.

Approximately a thousand came forward with offers of their own blood, willingly and without fee, if that blood could help combat the strange disease. Pint after pint of the offered blood was drawn from the bodies of its donors, injected, day after day, into the boy's.

For a while the battle against the strange anemia seemed to be won. Out of a thousand people who offered to submit to transfusion, ten were accepted. Ten successive transfusions were made, each one with marked improvement of the boy's condition as the new red corpuscles took up the duties of those destroyed by the mysterious disease. But the disease, as usual, was too strong. Nothing could be done. A few hours after his tenth supply of new blood, the unfortunate boy died. But not until public response to his misfortune had shown the power of human sympathy and had attracted more attention than ever before to the use of blood transfusions in the treatment of diseases of this kind.

One reason why physicians have taken so much pains to develop ways of supplying new blood is to prevent death by hemorrhage. To lose a great deal of blood used to be considered inevitably fatal. Nowadays, if the sufferer can be got quickly to a hospital, where new blood is available, there is relatively little danger. The human blood system is highly elastic. It can lose much blood and still recover. It can accept an extra quart or so and not rise to undue pressure.

The reason is that much blood is always kept in what might be called storage in the tiny capillaries of the skin, the muscles and other organs. There is some blood storage, too, in the centers of the bones. A pint or so more or less of the blood usually makes little difference. The balance is soon restored.

Severe bleeding, however, may lower the body's blood reserve below the danger point. Then a new supply from outside is necessary. This is especially true of those unfortunate individuals known as "bleeders," whose blood refuses to clot properly, so that any tiny cut may prove impossible to stop, and may cause its victim to bleed to death.

The distinguished German physician, Dr. Erwin Schrader, of Heidelberg, recently described, for example, two brothers, who possessed this blood abnormality, one that frequently runs in families. One brother died, Dr. Schrader reports, by bleeding to death from a small cut made by the kick of a horse. The other brother bit his tongue on a broken tooth, which the dentist had been afraid to extract for fear that the bleeding from the gums could never be stopped. The accidental bite nearly had the same effect, for the tiny wound kept bleeding for days, gradually draining away the victim's life blood. Finally, by using every resource of medical science, Dr. Schrader managed to control the bleeding by frequent transfusions, and removed the fragments of the offending tooth.

Blood transfusion in such cases is now the medical standby. No one knows precisely what it is that is lacking in the blood of a "bleeder" to make it refuse to clot. Whatever it is, however, the new blood from another individual seems able to supply this, so that the injection of a small dose of new blood once in a while often enables such a person to live a normal life.

The benefit seems not to be confined to the amount of the substance necessary for clotting added in the new blood. The action of transfusion goes further. It seems somehow to stimulate the blood of the deficient individual himself to be more normal, much the same as a blood transfusion does in cases of blood poisoning by bacteria.

Such bacterial invasions of the blood are among the most dreaded of all diseases by physicians. A germ invades, perhaps, a tiny cut on a finger. Within a day or two a suspicious redness begins to spread up the arm. Fever begins. It is often less than a week until the patient is at the point of death. Instead of being confined to a small infected spot close to where it got its first foothold, the invading germ has entered the blood stream and has spread everywhere. Most of the people to whom this happens die.

Recently doctors have begun to treat these cases by the transfusion of new blood. It is not that the new blood replaces damaged old blood or acts in any similar simple way. The effect can be produced by too little blood for that. A pint or less is often effective, although the whole amount of blood, good or bad, in the average human body is five or six quarts. Apparently what happens is that the small amount of new blood which is added stimulates the old blood, or stimulates some other organ of the invaded body to better fighting of the germ. Blood is not merely a watery liquid in which float the red corpuscles. Instead it is an extremely complicated chemical mixture, and as truly alive as any other part of the body. It can defend itself, and the new reinforcement from outside seems to help it to do so.

It is chemical effects of this same kind which explain, Dr. Protti believes, the value of his method of blood injection in premature old age. In this instance the new blood is not introduced into the patient's veins. Instead, a small amount of it is injected into muscular tissues, as the doctor injects drugs with a hypodermic syringe. The new blood disintegrates chemically. Products from it are absorbed by the body, seeming to spur the glands and blood-making machinery and other organs of that aging body to renewed activity.

Actual use of blood transfusion was not possible until a Vienna physician, Dr. Karl Landsteiner, discovered, in 1900, that instead of all human blood being alike, it is really divided into several separate types which will not always mix successfully with each other. Doctors now know that blood from one human being should not be injected into another human being until samples have been taken from each body and "matched," or compared with the other by chemical tests. If these tests are successful the two bloods will mix and the new blood may be injected. If the samples do not match the injection must not be made, no matter how necessary some transfusion seems to be.

That is why many of the charitable persons who were willing to give blood for the boy who was ill in Staten Island found themselves rejected by the physicians. Their bloods did not match his in chemical character. It was necessary to find persons whose bloods did match, otherwise the injection would have done more harm than good.

Gradually, however, the experts are learning more and more about the nature of these chemical differences in blood and about how to conduct transfusions easily and safely. When the modern process of transfusion was first put on a practicable basis by Dr. G. W. Crile, of Cleveland, twenty years ago, it was complicated and serious. The patient and the donor of the blood had to lie side by side on adjoining beds. A blood vessel was exposed in the patient's arm, another in the arm of the donor. These two were then connected by a tube of rubber or glass, and blood was allowed to flow directly from one into the other.

Nowadays everything is simpler. Blood can be drawn off, treated chemically and stored. It may be injected from a storage reservoir or a syringe, much as drugs are injected. Every year the procedure becomes surer and safer.

It is not even impossible that animal blood may be used, as has already been done experimentally by Dr. Cruchet, in London, and Dr. Yourevitch, in Czechoslovakia. Perhaps even synthetic blood, made in the laboratory, out of suitable chemicals, will one day be injected, in emergencies, into human veins.

"Back to Veils and Eastern Manners," Water Boy Ruler Orders Afghan People

NOT so many months ago King Amanullah sat in the luxurious interior of the royal palace at Kabul chatting contentedly with his comely queen, Souriya, about the gratifying success of his scheme for westernizing tradition-bound Afghanistan.

His dapper majesty looked not at all like a potentate of the East and might easily have been taken, except for his Afghan cast of countenance, for a meticulous Britisher or a well-to-do American. From his custom-made shoes to his foulard necktie, he was a man of the Western world.

Souriya, first lady of Afghanistan, presented no less the appearance of a lady of Paris, or London or New York. For the tea gown that draped gracefully about her knees bespoke the craftsmanship of a Parisian coutourier, and the trim slippers that matched the gown had come to her from a London bootery famed for its list of blue-blooded patrons.

"Well," said Amanullah to his queen, "it's slow work, but most of the women are obeying my edict, and I see fewer and fewer veiled faces on the streets. And the men, too, are discarding their turbans and robes and going in for coats, trousers and hats made in England and in America.

"The merchants," Souriya's husband told her, "are co-operating with me and are carrying more and more western clothes in their bazaars. Before long the grumblers who feel it's a sacrilege to change our traditional dress will see the wisdom of my reforms and we shall be as modern as Turkey."

The Amir Habibullah, Formerly Bacha-I-Saqao, the Water Boy, Who Has Risen to the Dictatorship of Afghanistan, Photographed When a Member of the Bandit Tribe That Has Now Come Into Power.

The Amir Habibullah in His Role of Ruler of the Afghans. —And Below— King Amanullah, Whose Downfall Followed His Attempt to Force Western Customs and Dress Upon His Country.

The Traditional Dress of Afghanistan Women, Which Queen Souriya Abolished and Which Has Now Come Into Vogue Again.

Queen Souriya Wearing the European Costume That Caused Most of the Trouble.

But the grumbling did not stop. In fact it grew into an ominous rumble that rolled to the very gates of he royal palace and finally burst in an explosion of revolt that sent the King and Queen fleeing to Herat, the sometimes capital of Afghanistan, where Amanullah felt he could muster enough loyal subjects to quell any uprising against his authority.

Whether the revolt that drove Amanullah off his throne was the direct result of his attempt to westernize a nation steeped in the ways of the East, or whether Bacha-I-Saqao, the bandit chieftain, who started as a water-boy and now rules both Kabul and Herat with an iron hand, just happened to strike when the grumbling was loudest, is a moot question.

Anyway the one-time water-boy, who chooses to be called by the regal title of Amir Habibullah, holds the whip hand in Afghanistan and Amanullah is out. So is his brother Inayatullah, who attempted to sit on the throne when the king fled, and who promptly took to his heels when Habibullah and his horde of tribesmen poured into Kabul.

Amir Habibullah, for all his lack of royal blood, is no fool. He knew that Amanullah's determined plan for westernizing Afghanistan was meeting strong opposition in all parts of the country, and one of the ex-water-boy's first official acts was to issue an edict against the wearing of western clothes, either by men or women.

The veil, he said, is a tradition among Afghan women, as the turban was with the men, and they must be worn in the interests of a vigorous and concerted Afghan spirit. Only a few citizens in Kabul and Herat raised objection to Amir Habibullah's edict and in words hard and definite he disposed of this opposition.

Afghanistan's low-born and high-handed king, in addition to restoring eastern dress and customs to the country, seems to be playing the role of an Oriental Robin Hood. He is levying heavy taxes on the wealthy merchants of the country and from the overflowing coffers of his treasury he promises to help the farmers and small traders attain financial independence. In a word, his policy is to take from the rich and give to the poor.

The patricians of the country do not fancy being ruled by a rough-and-ready tribal chieftain who spent his early youth as a water-boy, nor do they relish having a woman, captured by Amir Habibullah on one of his predatory expeditions, sitting on the throne once occupied by Queen Souriya. But they admit that their new king is a brave man and a good soldier, and that he made the strongest possible bid for the support of the masses when he undid all of Amanullah's westernizing in one curt, dictatorial edict.

Duck-Billed Women Leave Africa for the First Time and Give Paris a Real Shock

AT LAST Paris, the city that thought it had run the whole gamut of thrills, has been shocked into exclamations of amazement, the like of which have never been heard in the ornate boxes of the Folies Bergere or in the dim-lit interiors of Montmartre's gayest and wildest night clubs.

Laughing, blase, broad-minded Paris has been made to gasp in astonishment at a spectacle that must be seen to be appreciated in all its rather horrifying oddity—fifteen dusky belles from Central Africa with lower lips stretched to the size of a soup plate and upper lips fully half that unbelievable diameter!

For years Parisians have been told that the women of the Sara-Djinges tribe in the Lake Tchad region of Central Africa are duck-billed creatures, gruesomely deformed by their own hands. They have even seen photographs of these curious people, who are French citizens by virtue of the fact that their equatorial home is a French colony. But a woman with a lip twelve inches in diameter must be seen to be appreciated.

Recently the French Resident in the Lake Tchad country broke a precedent that has been in force since France acquired this strip of jungle country, and permitted fifteen of the most grotesque duck-billed women of that torrid domain to be sent to France. He granted this permission only because eminent French anthropologists, most of them unable to make a journey to Central Africa, wanted to make a study of these strange people.

Even the scientific-minded students of man, his background and his sundry forms and foibles, were amazed when they looked upon these ebony caricatures, who are deemed exceedingly beautiful by the Sara-Djinges males.

Strange Duck-billed Women From Central Africa, Smoking and Drinking Despite the Difficulties Presented by Their Huge Lips, in Which They Have Inserted Large Wooden Discs.

Newspaper articles spread the news that these curiosities from the heart of Africa were in Paris, and an intrigued public clamored to be allowed to see for themselves if what the scientists were saying was true. And it was finally decided to put the fifteen duck-billed "beauties" on public exhibition.

Scientists explained to the army of visitors at the unique exhibit that the process of stretching the lips began when the Sara-Djinges women were four or five years old.

Straws or reeds were inserted in punctures through the lips, and from time to time larger objects were put in the holes, until, at the age of twelve, a girl could carry a three-inch disc in her lower lip and a two-inch disc in her upper lip.

At twenty-five a fashionable Sara-Djinges matron is likely to carry a seven-inch disc in her lower lip, and by the time she reaches middle age she has attained the distinction of a twelve-inch disc. It is a matter of social pride with these women that they shall keep on stretching their lips until death, or the limits to which flesh can be distended puts a stop to their seemingly inhuman custom.

So far as can be learned, this lip-stretching is a betrothal and marriage custom peculiar to the Sara-Djinges tribe. The husband-to-be makes the first perforations in his future spouse's lips and officiates at all subsequent operations, both before and after he marries the girl.

When a man has thus put his mark on a dusky belle and made her "beautiful" by a series of stretchings, she dare not leave him and no other man will attempt to steal her. The distortion of the lips makes talking difficult and the Sara-Djinges wives have little to say.

Freed by Jury After Killing the Man Who Forced His Love on Her

Eva Cofer, the Tennessee Mountain Girl, Who Killed the Village Storekeeper When He Attempted to Hug Her.

EVA COFER, a pretty 21-year-old Tennessee mountain girl, resented the village storekeeper's attempt to hug her. When he started to renew his unwelcome attentions, she killed him with a wagon-wheel spoke. Then she went back to her strawberry patch.

The next day she was arrested and thrown into the Chattanooga jail. The Attorney General of the State of Tennessee himself led the legal fight against her when she was placed on trial. He demanded she be sent to the electric chair.

Eva told her story on the witness stand. "I'd rather be dead than lose my character," she told the jurymen. They deliberated less than half an hour and brought in a verdict of "Not Guilty." There was a great demonstration in the court room, crowded with mountain folk.

The tragedy occurred in Georgetown, a tiny village perched up in the White Oak Mountains, in extreme Southeastern Tennessee. Lee Atchley had watched Eva Cofer grow from a long-legged hill girl to a charming young woman. He kept the general store, which Eva visited almost daily, chatting and laughing with the storekeeper and his hard-working wife. Atchley had one serious fault; he was addicted at times to overindulgence in "mountain dew," corn liquor manufactured by the mountaineers.

One day last Spring Eva made her usual trip to the store. She bought a nickel's worth of candy and stood eating it leaning on the counter and talking to Mrs. Atchley. Atchley, unobserved by either of them, came up behind the girl and without warning put both arms around her waist, giving her a bear-like hug. She dropped her candy and slapped him.

"Knock the fire out of him," advised the storekeeper's wife.

They struggled for a few seconds. Eva broke free and fled from the store. Her modesty was outraged. She was wild with anger, dazed by the indignity offered her. For an hour she wandered about, her head in a whirl. She visited her grandfather's home, then her uncle's; made a trip to the village spring, started home again.

Passing the store, Mrs. Atchley saw her and called to her:

"Pick up a stick and when Lee comes out flail thunder out of him."

Mrs. Atchley went behind the store to milk her cows. A few minutes later her husband came out of the store and saw the girl in front of the scale house, across the street. No one else saw what occurred.

At the trial in Chattanooga, Miss Cofer testified:

"I thought he was coming out there on me, and I knew how he had treated me and I could not protect myself with my hands. I did not see him until I got out in the street and he came on me and I hit him on the arm. He kept coming on me and I hit him. Oh, I did not mean to do it, but I had to protect myself."

Where and when she got the wagon wheel spoke she could not remember. But it was in her hand at her time of need.

After the blows, Atchley was found by his little daughter, Lucille, aimlessly walking around. She led her father back to where the mother was milking, where he collapsed and died soon afterward. Eva was arrested next day.

Although Attorney General Lively and two other high-priced lawyers tried their best to send Eva to the electric chair, the Tennessee jury could not see it that way. Like the mountain dwellers of Georgetown, they think a girl has a right to use a wagon wheel spoke to defend her character.

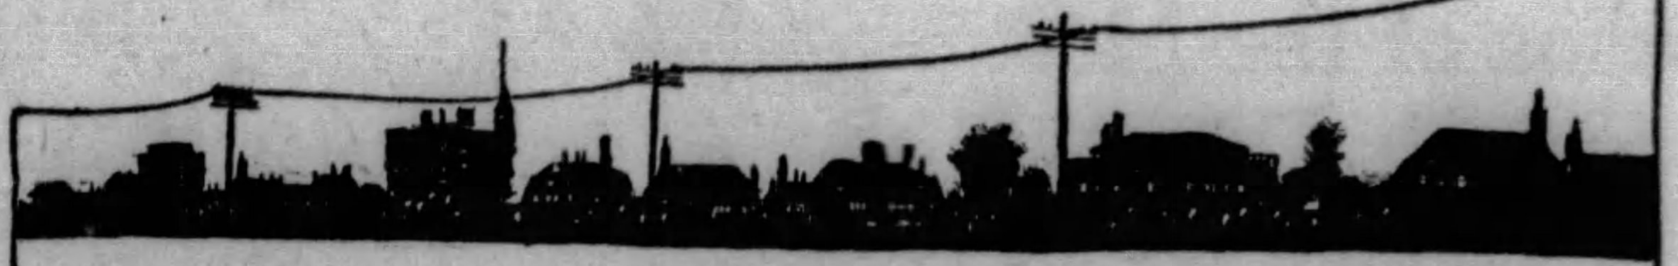
Mystery of Hollywood's "Suicide Cycles"



Doctors and Police Can't Understand Why, When One of the Sorrowful Beauties Takes Her Life, Two More Cases Follow at Once

"Jack, did you ever hear a shot over the telephone?" This Was the Message Received by Jack White While He Was Having Dinner With a Male Companion. The Seriousness of the Voice of His Wife, a Beautiful Spanish Dancer in Hollywood, Caused Him to Hang Up the Receiver and Dash Home. There He Found His Wife on the Floor, a Bullet in Her Brain. This Was the Beginning of Another Cycle of Three Hollywood Suicides.

Helen St. Claire, Film Actress, Took a Fatal Dose of Poison Because Her Husband, Arthur, Scenario Writer, Had Objected to Her Film Career.

Bertha W. Kirk, Well-Known Character Actress, With Whom Captain H. J. Pepper Had Fallen in Love, and Because He Could Not Win Her He Killed Her and Died Beside Her.

Patricia Marshall, the "Extra" Girl Who Ended All Her Troubles With Poison Because She Thought Her Life Had Been a Failure. (And Above) Mary Lygo, Former "Follies" Beauty, Who Ended an Eventful Life by Taking Poison Because She Had Failed Even as an "Extra" in Hollywood.

DISAPPOINTED in love or ambition, Hollywood suicides come in cycles of three, and nobody knows why. Every time the ambulance brings in the first of one of these tragic trios, the police and the attendants at the hospitals and the morgue say:

"Now, there will be two more."

Always the two come in quick succession, and then a pause. Three leaves detach themselves from the tree of life at one time, but no more and no less. That the suicides in the film capital run in threes was first noticed in 1927. Many of the churches believe that a special fate is reserved for the souls of those who take their own lives, and from this has risen a curious explanation.

As in the play, "Outward Bound," some fancy that a spectral ship calls for their spirits and that the captain of that unseen craft, perhaps, waits till three broken hearts are ready to stop and give him three passengers, "outward bound."

Some take poison or jump from high windows, but others find strange ways out of life, and seemingly go for strange reasons. One girl got into a parked car, found a pistol in one of its pockets, and shot herself. Her dying explanation was:

"My last good dress was ruined."

Another took off her clothes, burned them on the beach and plunged into the Pacific Ocean. A third called up her husband and asked him if he had ever heard a pistol shot over the telephone. A fourth slashed her wrists with a razor blade, and then walked about the streets of Hollywood until she fell fainting from loss of blood.

An ex-vaudeville actor, who could not get along with his wife in life, took her along with him to the next world, where there is said to be neither marrying nor giving in marriage.

On June 1, 1927, an attractive young woman was found in the agonies of poison at a North Bronson avenue apartment. She gave the name of Irene Fuller, a name that had never appeared in electric lights, nor been flashed on a screen, nor even appeared on a studio pay roll. Nobody had heard of her. Evidently she was some pretty, ambitious girl, who had come, like thousands of others, full of the hope of starring, and failed of even an "extra" job. As Irene Fuller she died in the General Hospital, but the police found in her trunk, besides a few worn dresses, some letters from her mother, five pawn tickets and a telegram signed "G."

From these clues they learned that she was really Mary Lygo, former "Follies" beauty, who, a few years before, had brought a quite celebrated breach of promise suit against Gordon C. Thorne, member of a prominent Chicago family.

While the hospital doctors were still striving to keep Mary Lygo's broken heart going, their ambulance was charging furiously down Wilcox avenue. Presently it returned, slowly and quietly, with Patricia Marshall, an exquisitely beautiful "extra" girl. There was no hurry now. Its passenger had taken poison and was "outward bound" beyond recall.

Overnight the Receiving Hospital ambulance did exactly the same thing at a North Cahuenga avenue address, where Helen St. Claire, an actress, was dead, like the two others, of poison. Her husband, Arthur St. Claire, scenario writer, had objected to her film career, so the police said. It was then that people remembered that suicides had been coming in threes before, and everyone watched to see if it would happen again.

A few weeks after these events Kadja Simonzits swallowed poison, then tied a towel around her neck in an effort to strangle herself. Celis Delargo, Mexican beauty, 26, killed herself with chloroform, and Helen McCloskey, former Hollywood actress, put on her wedding veil, and, after praying before the statue of a saint, hurled herself from an apartment window, fracturing her skull.

In April of last year Hellen Halla, also known as Darienne Dove, put on a silken wrapper, lighted an incense burner in her hotel room and wrote:

"The height of old-fashioned happiness, where loves are true and friends sincere, is beyond reach."

Then she swallowed three bottles of poison, though one would have been enough, and listened for the whistle of the "black ship." Helen had tried music and motion pictures in vain. Love, too, had filtered out of her grasp, until she finally offered to sell herself in marriage for $5,000. She failed in everything, even death. Three bottles were too much, causing her stomach to throw up the poison, and allowing the ambulance to arrive in time.

Soon after this near-tragedy Wayne Bradford, known as the "Demon Dancer," was seen to kiss the picture of Mavis Mayo, his pretty fiancee, and heard to say:

"Well, good-by, Baby."

It was good-by. Leaping from the window of his Los Angeles hotel room, he landed lifeless on a skylight, five stories below. The story was simple. Bradford had been injured in one of his acrobatic dances and out of work for a long time.

The third of that cycle brought the ambulance to a home on Beachwood drive, where the well-dressed body of a man lay on the lawn, his soul already aboard the ship. In his apartment were found stacks of unsold scenarios and the picture of Meeka Aldrich, actress and daughter of the famous singer, Madame Mariska Aldrich. The man was Lawrence White, and Meeka his wife. One must be successful to have a beautiful wife in Hollywood—so White had deliberately drunk himself to death—not a very difficult thing to do on bootleg liquor.

Even if it misses, the hand of death only snatches for three suicides at a time. Marie Winton, lovely blonde of 25, found herself starving as an "extra" girl, got a job with the telephone company at San Francisco and lost it.

That was the last straw. Just before sunrise she went to the edge of the waters near Golden Gate Park, took off her clothes and burned them to prevent identification. Then she waded out into the cold, dark waters toward the "black ship" that should be waiting out there for her. But a man's voice from the beach commanded her to come back. Instead of obeying she plunged under the surface, and immediately there was another splash and a scuffle out in the water.

A little later a blushing man handed a live but unclothed blonde to a blushing policeman, and just then came the dawn, also very red.

Marie escaped, but Arthur Witter, proprietor of a little plating mill in Los Angeles, did not. Witter's pretty wife had answered the call of the films, and the tragedy came not from failure, but because she succeeded. Success took her out of the husband's arms and life entirely. Alone in his little mill he cocked a .38-calibre revolver, which happened to be the same number as his age, and shot himself to death.

In this cycle death had reached twice, gotten one and missed one. On its third grab it caught two, but only one was for that ship. Hollywood calls all sorts of specialists besides the young and beautiful. Jack Wood, a trick rifle and revolver shot, had been getting along nicely with his wife for many years, though twice a day in vaudeville he had been shooting cigarettes and cherries out of her lips. But when they did the same thing for the camera in Hollywood, she did not like him any more and soon they quarrelled and separated.

One day the neighbors saw Wood call at his wife's home, and later heard two rifle shots. They found both bodies together. The sharpshooter had shot true to the end, but, according to the Hollywood theory, his wife's spirit will not join him on that boat, because she was not a suicide.

Mrs. Jack White, a beautiful Spanish dancer, began a new cycle with a note to her husband.

"To you," it said, "I have nothing to say. You have made my life a living hell. You lied to me from the very start. My death will haunt you to your dying day. You will never have a moment's peace. I will always be there to point a finger at what you have done."

She ran a blotter over the lines, turned to the telephone and called her husband, who was having a chicken dinner with a friend, Fred Ernest.

"Hello! Is this Jack?"

"Yes."

"Jack, did you ever hear a shot over the telephone?"

White, startled, hung up, and he and Ernest raced to his home. When they arrived the Spanish dancer lay on the floor, a bullet in her brain.

While the coroner was preparing to hold an inquest word was flashed from San Francisco that another film dancer, Billie Pierce, had tried to "cash in" from all her worldly troubles. Billie was doing well in Hollywood pictures when she suddenly decided to go away for awhile. In San Francisco she met a boy she called "Ben." They had a very nice time for a while, then "Ben" accused her of "cheating." He picked up her picture one night and walked out. And for Billie the whole world went black. She got a vial of poison and drank it. Then the doctors at Morton Hospital got her. The next day, she promised never to do it again—that is, take poison, not fall in love.

A few days later Captain H. J. Pepper, a retired hotel keeper, of Winnipeg, Can., sixty years old, but as infatuated as a boy of eighteen, fired four shots at Bertha W. Kirk, a well-known character actress, who had set his heart aflame. He had gotten that way from playing in a picture with her. Having made sure of the actress, he turned the weapon on himself and died beside her. Hollywood's epitaph was:

"He couldn't live with her and couldn't live without her."

Jeannette Marcella, twenty-five, film actress, quarrelled with her boy friend and ate poisoned candy. She collapsed on the street, but physicians saved her. Ralph Yearsley, widely known character, who had played two important roles with Richard Barthelmess, made up his mind last December that he was a failure and shot himself to death in his home.

Last March Julia Reynolds, aged twenty-three, announced that life was "all blah," slammed the door and walked out. As nobody saw any deep significance in that remark, they let her go. Two Hollywood policemen, however, took notice of a double trail of blood on the sidewalk, and following it for several blocks, came upon Julia unconscious. She had slashed her wrists with a safety razor blade, and walked around till she fainted. Her life was saved.

Meanwhile, the ambulance was off for "Pat" Pemberton, the twenty-four-year-old girl with the "million-dollar-smile." She had come from San Antonio, Tex., to cash in on that locally famous smile. But she could not get anything at all, and finally went to work as a waitress. One by one her pretty dresses wore out till just one was left fit to apply in for picture work.

In that last precious gown she went to a party, hoping to meet a director who might think her the right type. At that party a wife, bored at her husband's conversation, broke a whiskey bottle over his head. It did not kill him, but he fell sideways into Pat's lap. Pat looked at the spot of whiskey and water on her skirt, went out and sat in a car. As Fate would have it, she found a loaded pistol in the side pocket of the car, and shot herself through the heart. A garage mechanic, the first to get to her, was puzzled at her dying words:

"My last good dress was ruined! She spoiled my last dress!"

The last of that cycle was Sally La Forma, a film "extra," who took poison, but got well. Little Susette France, another, two years older, has just started a new cycle by fracturing her skull with a window jump. The doctors say she will recover, but they fear there will be two more right away.

The Fad for Printed Chiffon

Authoritative and Newest Fashions From the Studios of the Most Distinguished French Dress Creators, Drawn by Soulie, Foremost Fashion Artist of Paris

Another Vague Design in Printed Chiffon Has Been Used by Lucile Paray for This Charming Model. The Pattern Is in Black and Yellow, One of the Most Popular Color Combinations of the Season, and the Design Makes a Sort of Stripe, With Rows of Large Hortensia Blossoms Edged With Their Leaves. The Interesting Point About the Gown Is the Use of This Leaf Edge as Trimming. It Is Cut Out Here and There, Giving Movement to the Edges of the Frills That Fall in a Cascade on the Right Side. The Bodice Is Slim and Straight and Finished With a Narrow Scarf Round the Neck. Below the Waistline Is a Peplum Frill of the Material, Set on a Diagonal Line, and Below Its Lowest Point the Material Hangs to the Floor.

From Maggy Rouff Comes a Model That May Be Worn for a Garden Party, With a Big Hat, or for the Evening. The Material Is a Printed Chiffon in Shades of Beige, Pink and Yellow. The Design Is a Small One of Vague Flowers. The Frock Is Slim, With One Long Full Godet at the Side, and Over It Is Worn a Full Three-quarter Coat of the Same Chiffon, Which Is Finished in a Fichu Collar, Tied on One Shoulder With a Long Falling End. Without a Hat, and Worn With the Coat, It Makes a Pretty Costume for Out-of-Door Dining. The Coat May Be Removed for Dancing, Showing a Simple but Charming Printed Frock. If It Is Worn in the Afternoon, Long Gloves in Beige Antelope Are Added, and the Hat Would Probably Be a Wide Simple One in Beige Straw or Fine Horsehair.

This Model From Charlotte Is for a Garden Party. It Is Worn on the Stage of the Potiniere Theatre by the Tall Blonde, Suzy Prim. A Short-waisted Bodice, Fitted to the Figure, and a Full Skirt, Longer in the Back, Are Made of a White Printed Chiffon, Printed in Roses of Pink and Green. All the Edges Are Outlined in a Blue Band of Mauve Chiffon, and the One That Outlines the Neckline in Front Extends in the Back in Two Bretelles, Tied at the Waist in an Apron-string Bow.

Louise Boulanger Particularly Favors the Printed Chiffon Mixed With Gold or Silver. The Gown Sketched Is a Charming Printed Chiffon, Bright but Soft Red in Tone, With a Printed Pattern of Sweet Pea Blossoms in Many Colors. Over All Are Rows of Graduated Stripes in Gold, Giving Body to the Material, Which, However, Looses None of Its Flexibility, Owing to the Wonderful Suppleness of the Gold Threads Employed. The Silhouette Is Very New, the Waistline Marked by a Slight Blousing of the Material, Which Continues in a Tight-fitting Basque to Just Above the Knee, Where Full Panels, Uneven in Length, Are Set on With Gathers. In the Front the Bodice Line Mounts Right to the Collarbone, and in the Back the Material Is Continued in a Once-over Knotted Scarf.

PARIS, July 26.

PRINTED chiffon is undoubtedly the favorite material of the Summer season, both for afternoon and evening. At all the smart afternoon affairs, if the weather is fine, we see pretty women dressed in this material. Nearly always a little jacket, or a perfectly straight three-quarter coat, accompanies the gown, for we make jackets to go with everything this season.

Among the favorite colors in printed chiffon are white and black, black and yellow, black and rose, shades of pale green, yellow and white, and sometimes pink and green on a white ground. The designs vary from tiny ones, usually floral, to vague, splashy patterns of flowers or leaves.

A few modernistic designs are seen, but those are in the minority. On the whole, there are more dark backgrounds—black, dark blue or dark green—than light ones, though occasionally a light ground is chosen, as in the model from Charlotte sketched on this page, which is worn on the stage by the tall blonde actress, Suzy Prim.

This gown would have looked eccentric last year, with its close-fitting, short bodice marking the natural waist, and its full skirt longer in the back. The color scheme is pink, white, green and mauve, for all the edges are outlined with a band of mauve chiffon, which is used across the high neckline in front, and extended in the back into two bretelles tied at the natural waistline in a apron-string bow.

The eye has become accustomed to the short-waisted, long-skirted gowns, and we find them very pretty on slender women. Sometimes, even if the bodice be long and slim, the natural waist is marked by a ribbon tied at this point. Several houses do this, Worth and Augusta Bernard among them, while Louise Boulanger puts a suede belt at the waist of some of her long, slim, chiffon gowns, and Lanvin adds a narrow belt of the material at this point, even though her bodices be sheath-like almost to the knee.

From Maggy Rouff comes a gown that may be adapted to many occasions by the addition of the little jacket in the same printed chiffon. Here we have a beige ground, with a small design of flowers in pink and yellow. The frock is slim, with one long godet panel at the side, and over it is worn a three-quarter coat, made of the same chiffon, finished with a fichu collar, which is tied on one shoulder, with long falling ends. The gown, worn with a coat but without a hat, is pretty for out-of-door dining on a fine night at the Chateau de Madrid, or one of the other restaurants in the Bois. When a hat and long gloves are worn, it is appropriate for a garden party; while worn without either coat or hat, it makes a charming evening frock for informal Summer dancing.

One of the most popular combinations of color in printed chiffon is black and yellow. One sees innumerable models from Patou in this combination, and in yellow and white, printed with his famous "mimosa" design. The gown sketched is from Lucile Paray, and shows a design of large hydrangeas in yellow on a black ground. The pattern makes a wide, vague stripe, and here and there the edges are cut out, giving movement to the cascade of frills that hangs to the floor on one side.

This cutting out of the design is a favorite trick of the Summer. Chanel likes to use it on all the edges of her flowered chiffon dresses. Sometimes she cuts out the flowers, and strings them in a ruche which borders the hem of the frock, whether they are meant for afternoon or evening.

Very new are the printed chiffons with an added design in gold and silver. They are called chiffons lames, on account of the addition of metal threads, and a great vogue is predicted for them next Winter and for the lame gauses, which are the more fragile edition of the same idea, and will take the place of the printed chiffons of this Summer. The gown from Louise Boulanger is in this material. It has a red chiffon ground, with a printed design of separated sweetpea blossoms, in many colors. Then it is striped all over in graduated stripes of gold, giving slightly more body to the material, but not adding much to its thickness, on account of the wonderful thinness and suppleness of the metal thread used.

The silhouette of this gown is very new. It mounts to the collarbone in front, is quite sleeveless, and is cut into a deep V in the back. The shoulder pieces are extended in the back to form a short scarf-collar, which is tied once-over. The bodice is fitted, and the natural waistline is marked by a slight blousing at this point. Below the bodice extends smoothly over the hips, and is slit in front, while the skirt below is full and longer in the back.

Madame Agnes, the milliner who is famous for her elegance, wears this gown with gold jewelry and perfectly plain red crepe de Chine sandals. The effect is very pretty and novel.

How Wife Trading is Wiping Out Canada's Eskimos

"Eskimo" Harris and His Wife; Harris Is One of the Few Traders Who Treats the Eskimos Fairly and Is Co-Operating With the Dominion Government in Its Effort to Save Them.

HOW to stop the white man from exterminating the last of the Canadian Eskimos is the embarrassing problem facing the Dominion Government.

The white man does not actually hunt the Eskimo with a gun, but his methods of exploiting the child-minded man of the Arctic wastes are even more deadly. Within a few years these aborigines have been reduced from 15,000 hearty specimens to a scrubby, disease-ravaged remnant of less than 5,000.

If the white man pursued the little copper-skinned fellow with bullets, the Eskimo would probably flee into the more inaccessible wastes of the Polar regions, as most of the big game has done. Instead, the victim remains and assists his own corruption and ruin. No sooner does a white trader from civilization arrive than an Eskimo approaches him with a string of wives, asking the white man to marry them all free. Wives are valuable property and can be traded for rifles, tobacco, skins and other precious articles. A wife's cash value is anywhere from ten dollars to two hundred. A few are worth twice that.

The native who makes the proposition has picked up as many bargains in young and sometimes rather pretty maidens as he could find. One might think that a good looking flapper maiden would bring a higher price in the matrimonial market than would a fat, homely and older woman, but such is not the case. Sentiment and an eye for beauty have been frozen out of the Arctic race, by stern necessity, long ago. The native husband wants a practical, efficient, trained wife. Faces do not count, but he likes 'em fat because they can starve longer.

The difference between a competent wife who can do anything from setting a broken leg to paddling a tippy Kayak or skin canoe, in a stormy sea, and one who is not skillful at these things often makes the difference between survival or death during the long Winters since the race first settled in the North.

The native speculator buys the flappers from their parents for a song because they are inexperienced. He might marry and train them himself until they would bring a much higher price. But this would take a long time and the cost of feeding them would literally eat up his profits. If he can only induce a white man to marry them even for a short time, they will become more precious than if they had had a dozen ordinary husbands. He may even hope to get the fabulous sum of $500 for some of them.

The trader being shrewd, resists the offer at first, returning the coy smiles of the flappers with disapproving scowls. He tells the man to take them away—he does not want any wives, especially young ones whom nobody else has ever had.

The maidens look sad, and the speculator who owns them begins to bargain. He offers a white fox skin with each wife and keeps raising the dowry until finally the white man accepts as many women as he thinks he can stand around the place and a goodly pile of pelts changes hands.

The understanding is that at the end of six months the trader will "divorce" these wives back to the speculator. Having lived with a white man in the North is considered somewhat as a diploma from an exclusive finishing school is looked upon in civilized countries. To have a wife who once was the wife of a white man, gives an Eskimo the highest possible social prestige, and to own one of these superior creatures he is willing to pay the speculator many times the number of skins her education cost, and to toss in as part payment another flapper daughter. It is like turning in a car, only with wives it is the second-hand one that is the more valuable.

This extravagance would not be so bad if the white man's education did her or anyone else any good, but it does not. She is now not only useless as the helpmate of an Eskimo, but has learned a lot of civilized habits that are almost fatal for the native, and which her new husband and family religiously copy.

Peary, Amundsen and others who have made long stays in the Arctic quickly found that the Eskimo's uncouth dress and habits were nevertheless the best, not only for him but for anyone else who hopes to be healthy in that climate. They threw away their woolen clothes for carabou skins, filled their stomachs three times a day with raw meat, lived in the foul-smelling snow igloos and thrived. These expensive, white-trained wives however, demand woolens and even silk. The trader by way of a sort of voluntary alimony usually hands each of his departing wives a pair of silk stockings, one piece of silk underwear, one cotton lace handkerchief and a can opener.

Such generosity is good business. The other wives are not content until they have a similar outfit which the husband must buy from the trader. The can opener hanging on a thong from her neck is not only an ornament but a symbol of her education and emancipation. She has learned the delicatessen store dinner idea. To live up to the style of his new and fashionable wife the Eskimo must buy from the trader canned goods of all sorts, including condensed milk, instead of mother's for the babies.

To do the thing in style and be a real up-to-the-minute sport, the misguided Eskimo is often persuaded to move into one of the little settlements which spring up around the trading posts. Here he builds a wretched but fashionable little hut of stones and driftwood, and in spite of the stove the trader sells him, shivers miserably in his stylish woolen clothes. The children suffer from rickets and the whole family from scurvy, tuberculosis and all sorts of epidemics such as scarlet fever, measles, influenza and mumps, all of them unknown before the coming of the white man. In return for all these calamities, the dying race can buy patent medicines from the trader, hear the radio and get a little schooling free.

It would be unfair to say that all traders are so callous to the miseries of the natives. There are some like Cecil "Eskimo" Harris, whose post is in the Barren Lands on the west side of Hudson Bay. He has settled down to a serious-minded marriage with a native belle who has presented him with several cute and healthy little youngsters. Harris tries to advise his customers not to break away from the ways of their fathers, but as the advice is free, they do not pay much attention to it.

Before the coming of the white man, the Eskimo had a hard enough time, with his stone-age weapons of bone and ivory, killing sufficient animals to live on. When the first trader swapped him a rifle for furs it made life delightfully easy for a while. With the new weapon he could slaughter the caribou so easily that he used them for dog food. Rapidly he decimated the great herds and then suddenly, one year, the remainder vanished into parts unknown. No longer are caribou to be found on Hudson Bay or the Western Provinces nor do they trek across Coronation Gulf. The Canadian Eskimo's main food source is gone and with it his clothing supply. He is new busily exterminating the white fox and while that animal lasts he still has something to trade for wretched woolens and canned goods.

A large part of the 5,000 surviving Eskimos are not only sick and weak but most of the time on the edge of starvation. A Northern Manitoba trader closed up his shack for a four-day trip, following a trap line. When he returned he found the bodies of 29 Eskimos lying in the snow around the shack. The scene was such a shock that he moved the building to a new location. Later he learned the pitiful story from a couple of survivors.

The remnants of game seemed to have left the neighborhood and these poor Eskimos had reached the point of starvation practically on the same day. The thought had entered their minds simultaneously, as a last resort, to see if this white man would give them a bite to eat. They had dragged their way, some of them crawling on their knees to his empty hut. Too weak from famine and cold to break in, they had lain down and frozen to death. Whole families and even tribes have perished in this way.

Confronted with the alternative of the whole family starving, the Eskimo thinks little of knocking on the head his babies and aged parents. The Canadian Government and the missionaries tell the Eskimo that he must not kill, but the native is faced with a necessity so stern that the laws of God and man do not frighten him much. His answer is always, "What else could I do?"

The Canadian authorities are obliged to deal leniently with these simple-minded offenders. No jury has the heart to send them to the gallows, and a term in a nice, clean, warm prison with three square meals a day free, is about as much punishment as it would be for a judge to sentence a cold and hungry Boston tramp to spend the Winter at a Palm Beach hotel. The wretched Eskimo does not think it much of a calamity to die and therefore no great offense to kill.

The Eskimo can be saved, but there is only one way. Seventy years ago, the Danes found the Eskimos of Greenland "dirty, debauched and dwindling." The white man was blamed. The government ousted every white trader from the country. A government fur trading company was formed and operated without exploitation of the Greenlander. Today the Eskimos of that country are cleanly and prosperous, more numerous and contented than ever. Eskimos of Alaska, too, have increased in population and prosperity since attention was first given to the reindeer industry. But in the remote areas of Canada's Arctic there is a sorry picture.

Government officials like Commissioner Mackenzie, Canadian explorers like Captain H. T. Munn and Captain Harwood Steele, and missionaries like Bishop Stringer, of the Yukon, say the Eskimo is worth saving from extinction. But there is only one way to save the race. That is to rescue the Eskimo from the white man.

The Government is trying to aid the Eskimo in gaining a living under new conditions. Harpoons and nets are being distributed among the natives and attempts made to get them to fish and store fish for hard times. Buffalo pemmican from the buffalo parks of Alberta has just been sent to the Arctic for emergency rations. Supplies have been cached at a dozen places to await famine outbreaks.

A three-year survey of caribou and other animal life of the Barren Lands is being made. A great herd of reindeer is being driven across the Barren Lands from Alaska to Hudson Bay. Royal Canadian Mounted Police are handling the distribution of emergency rations.

"On humanitarian grounds alone, the Eskimo should be saved," says Mackenzie. "But there is another side of the story. The Eskimo is worth real cash to the country.

"The north has been the centre of the fur trade for centuries. Now big mining men have their eyes on the Arctic. The United States, Canada and England are interested.

"Without the Eskimo's assistance the opening up of the Far North will be practically impossible. The Eskimo is invaluable as a guide in that part of the country. If we allow him to die off we must learn the lessons of the Arctic by ourselves. Education will be costly."

FOR 2500 years there has existed a Greek manuscript telling of a great island, or island continent, in the Atlantic Ocean, between Europe and North and Central America.

This land, according to the legend, was the home of a highly civilized people, and was destroyed by volcanic eruptions, earthquakes and tidal waves in a single night, about seven to nine thousand years ago. The same story of a great and fertile country, destroyed by cataclysms and now submerged under the waters of the Atlantic, is found among the peoples of Northern Africa, the Mediterranean and the western portion of Europe, and is frequently referred to in the records of the ancient Mayans and Aztecs. It was believed by most of the peoples of Central America. The legend of the Mayans and Aztecs was that their forefathers had actually come from this lost land.

The majority of scientists have doubted the truth of the story. But recent discoveries off the coast of Northwestern France, seem to present startling evidence that such a land once filled a considerable part of what is now the North Atlantic Ocean.

A phenomenally low tide exposed a rock on which was found carved a face which resembles very closely those on the most ancient Mayan monuments and in the handful of books of the Mayan and Aztec peoples which escaped the bigotry of their conquerors. There was also a carved footprint similar to those found in Central America, a curious symbol shaped like a pair of tongs, and the carved imprint of horses' hoofs. The stone, or part of it, according to Professor Marcel Baudouin, who took casts of the carvings, was originally an altar.

But how could a Mayan face appear carved on an ancient stone off the coast of France, a full five thousand miles away from Central America?

Professor Baudouin believes that the answer is, first, that the forefathers of the Mayans and those who made the carvings and worshiped at the Brittany altar were the same; second, that at the time the altar was carved it was high above the surface of the sea, and perhaps stood on that same lost island continent, which then either extended as a whole or as a chain of islands to the very shores of Central America.

Cuba and the other Antilles and the Azores and the Canaries are now all that is left. As Professor Baudouin is Secretary General of the Prehistoric Society of France, and for fifty years has devoted himself to the study of prehistoric man, his conclusions cannot be waved lightly aside.

The idea of the lost land in the Atlantic was first familiarized to the world by the Greek philosopher Plato, who died in the year 347 B. C., and who said the facts came from Solon, one of the wisest of the Greeks, who had himself been apprised of them by an Egyptian priest of the Goddess Neith, or Net, at Sais, in Egypt.

An Old Drawing of an Extremely Ancient Greek Painting Showing Poseidon, the God of the Sea, Who Was Also the Chief God of Vanished Atlantis, According to the Greek Philosopher Plato. Horses Were Sacrificed to Him, and Carvings of Horses' Hoofs on the French Rock Are Supposed to Indicate That the Altar Was Dedicated to Him, Thus Strengthening the Atlantis Theory.

The Egyptian told Solon that at a remote date Athens was attacked by a mighty power which had tried to fix the yoke of empire upon the whole of Europe and Asia. This power came forth out of the Atlantic Ocean, from an island situated in front of the Pillars of Hercules, otherwise the Straight of Gibraltar. The island in question was greater than Libya or Northern Africa and Asia (Asia Minor) put together, "and was the way to other islands, and through the islands you might pass through the whole of the opposite continent which surrounded the true ocean."

The largest body of land in this archipelago was called "Atlantis," and sustained a great and wonderful empire, "which had rule over the whole island and several others, as well as over parts of the (opposite) continent." Its inhabitants, not content with the territory which already belonged to them, conquered the parts of Libya within the Pillars of Hercules as far as Egypt, and those of Europe as far as Tyrrhenia (Italy). Pressing eastward, they attacked Greece itself. But through the courage and address of the Athenians, the invading Atlanteans were beaten off and finally expelled from the whole of their possessions within the Mediterranean area.

At a later period, continued Solon's priestly informant, violent earthquakes and floods occurred. In a single day and night of heavy rains all the war-like men of Athens sank into the earth, and the island of Atlantis "in like manner" disappeared beneath the sea, "and this is the reason why the sea in those parts is impassable and impenetrable, because there is such a quantity of shallow mud in the way, and this was caused by the subsidence of the island."

The patron god of Atlantis was Poseidon, god of the sea, whom the Romans called Neptune. There was an immense temple to him, and horses were sacrificed in his honor. This, it is conjectured, explains the carvings of the horses' hoofs on the French rock. Professor Baudouin's altar was to Poseidon, chief god of Atlantis.

The Atlanteans, Plato says, employed themselves in constructing temples, palaces and harbors. They laid out the country in the following manner: "They threw bridges over the zones of sea which surrounded the central height and made a passage into the royal palace, which they increased in size and beauty with each successive reign. They drove a canal through the zones of the land 300 feet wide and about 100 feet deep, and fifty stadia (or about six miles) in length, constructing a harbor at the landward end of this waterway which was capable of sheltering the largest vessels.

"They also divided the zones of land which parted the zones of sea, erecting bridges of such a width as would leave a passage for a single trireme (or galley with three banks of oars) to pass out of one into another, and roofed them over. Now the largest of the zones into which a passage was cut from the sea was three stadia in breadth, and the zone of land which came next of equal breadth. But the next two zones, the one of water, the other of land, were two stadia, and the one which surrounded the central island was a stadium only in width. The island in which the palace was situated had a diameter of five stadia. All this, including the zones and the bridge, which was the sixth part of a stadium in width, they surrounded by a stone wall on all sides, placing towers and gates on the bridges where the sea passed in."

Professor Baudouin has written an interesting pamphlet describing his remarkable discovery and what he believes to be the significance of its inscriptions.

"At the extreme low tide of the equinox at the end of September, 1928," he says, "I was able to reach in a boat a block of stone which commonly lies under the sea in the former estuary of the river La Vie, which waters the northwestern part of the Department of Vendee. The sea at this time was lower than it had been in many years."

This rock, whose existence has long been known, is called by fishermen "The Big Stone" It is composed of quartzite and is a danger to navigation. The sailors of the little port of Havre de Vie, near which it lies, have always been on their guard against it. The rock lies in a north by south position.

Professor Baudouin, who has been familiar with this region for more than fifty years, says that he suspected for the last twenty years that there were prehistoric sculptures on the rock. A sailor of the town of Croix de Vie told him in his youth, when he was boating in this vicinity, about the situation of the big stone, and said to him that there were incomprehensible and illegible letters and signs on it. At that time he thought it might be one of the ancient monumental stones called menhirs, found in Brittany, which is adjacent to Vendee, and other Celtic countries, which had fallen down.

It was very difficult to approach the stone even at low tide on account of the thick mud and seaweed which surround it. Professor Baudouin had considerable difficulty in cleaning the upper surface. When he had finally done this, he was surprised to find it marked with a considerable number of carvings and inscriptions.

During two abnormally low tides he obtained a dozen plaster impressions of the rock, taken rather hurriedly on account of the rising sea. After a careful examination they showed the following evidences of human handiwork:

A circular disc bearing a human face with a cup, or cupula, near it.

A human foot with five toes, joined to the disk at an angle of 55 degrees by a polished canal 1 foot 4 inches long.

A letter or character of the "tongs type."

Three hoofs of horse-like animals.

In his laboratory Dr. Baudouin set to work to make positive casts of these negatives in plaster. The disk appeared to him for a moment to have no meaning, but a brief examination satisfied him that it represented a human face executed in true medallion form with profile turned to the left. It was carved in high and low relief. It had been skillfully executed in the quartzite, a very hard rock. A curious fact which he soon discovered was that it was surrounded by a circular canal which isolated it completely from the rest of the rock. Apparently this had some important meaning.

The medallion was circular and had a diameter of about eight inches. It was, therefore, nearly the size of a human head. It did not occupy the entre of the stone, but was nearer to the south ide. The character of the tongs type lay east and west at the northern edge, but toward the east. The foot with five toes was at the south-east corner. The three horses' hoofs were at the outhwest corner.

He soon found evidence that the rock had been carved by metal chisels and afterwards polished. It was, therefore, the work of man.

The second visit to the rock revealed further evidences of human work. The scientist diligently raced the places where the splinters of quartz-te had been removed by human hands leaving a surface different from that of the natural surface of the rock. These big splinters indicated he manner in which the medallion and other vork on the rock had been cut.

What impressed Professor Baudouin first of ll in this strange face was (1) the form of the nose; (2) the little pointed beard on the chin; (3) the presence of a tuft of hair at the summit f the skull at the point known to doctors as the ambda.

Other peculiarities were the general abundance of hair, with the heavy chignon hanging ver the back of the neck and the masses of hair ver the ears. But even more remarkable was he puffing out of the left cheek which was so oticeable that it seemed as if this mysterious ersonage were blowing into a trumpet.

The upper and lower lips protruded sharply nd the opening of the mouth was clearly indiated as well as the lower part of the left ear. The forehead was high and showed that the an belonged to the brachycephalous or broadeaded type of men. The cupula, or small up, behind the head was quite unmistakable nd had great archaeological significance. It ndicated that the work on the stone dated rom about the end of the age of polished stone nd copper, probably from seven to nine thousand ears ago.

As soon as the Professor was able to study the medallion carefully he found that it corresponded most nearly to the profiles of Mayan and Aztec sculptures of Central America, especially with regard to the form of the nose, the absence of beard and mustache, the presence of the false beard and the tuft of hair on the summit of the cranium. Two figures of a bas-relief in a ruined temple at Palenque, Mexico, showed almost identical features.

When Professor Baudouin compared the medallion with pictures of the ancient Mexican gods which are shown in two of the little more than a dozen of the books of the Mayans and Aztecs now in existence, the Codex Cospi and the Codex Borgia, he was astonished, he says, at the striking similarity of the nose on his relic to that of the ancient American gods.

Here Professor Baudouin brings out the interesting fact that this peculiar type of nose is still common among the inhabitants of France near the place of the discovery. He noticed this especially in the little town of Marais de Mont. A farmer named Marie living at La Barre-de-Mont, another village of the neighborhood, displayed a remarkable nose of the Mayan type. Now this man belonged to a family that had been living near the estuary of La Vie from the earliest times. In fact, it was impossible to fix a time when this man's ancestors had not lived there. Other doctors with whom Professor Baudouin consulted noted the existence of this peculiar aquiline nose along the coasts of Vendee and Britanny, both provinces which the Atlanteans would have been likely to reach.

A nose almost exactly corresponding to that of the medallion may be seen in the "Stela of Seibel," reproduced by M. Beuchart, in his "Manual of American Archaeology," page 465. On certain Peruvian vases in hammered silver, also reproduced by Bauchart the same vigorous type of nose is as pronounced as on the big rock.

The little beard or goatee was the next point of interest in the medallion. This goatee is certainly false, Professor Baudouin concludes, and is formed by small tufts of hairs fixed under the chin. It is thick at the base and tapers at the point like the French beard called an "imperiale," but is curved forward until it almost turns up to the front of the chin. Now, such an arrangement is found almost exactly duplicated in the painted Peruvian vases from Chama. Professor Baudouin discovered the little goatee in many other illustrations of ancient American relics.

This goatee, he says, was apparently a fore-runner of the peculiar type of beard shown on Egyptian divinities of the earliest historic period. But the particular shape of the beard on the medallion in France is known only in Central American drawings.

It does not appear on the strikingly similar faces on the Palenque bas-relief, because they are priests, and it was an attribute of deity.

Next in interest was the little tuft of hair implanted on the top of the head, similar to the scalp-lock formerly worn by certain North American Indians. Professor Baudouin instituted researches to find the significance and origin of this little tuft. He was greatly interested to discover it on the head of the striking Mexican warrior in another Mayan book, the Codex Telleriana-Remensis, page 37. This warrior has a wealth of hair of a similar style to the mysterious French head.

Similar scalp-locks were observed in the celebrated Mexican sculpture of "The Nine Lords of the Night," in the Codex Cospi. One of these lords has a tuft of hair on his head that is almost the duplicate of the one on the medallion.

On a painted vase from Chama, writes Professor Baudouin, there is a man with a goatee, having a magnificent tuft on his head, but considerably longer than in the medallion. He says that he found similar tufts in other early prehistoric pictures, "pointing to the wide distribution of the Atlanteans." On a rock at Minateda, in the Province of Albacete, in Spain, there is a prehistoric painting of a mother and child. The child has a double tuft of hair on the head of similar design to the single one on the medallion, while the mother's hair is dressed in conical style. This fact is noted by M. Luquet in "Art and Religion." Apparently the tuft indicated divinity or lordship and the conical style was reserved for women.

The chignon of hair hanging over the back of the neck of the medallion head is, according to Dr. Baudouin, another significant point. This way of dressing the hair, was of course, once common among American women, but nothing like it has so far been observed among the men of the past.

Many men of ancient races wore their hair long, but never in chignons or buns. For instance, the ancient Etruscans wore their hair falling over their shoulders and full beards also, as shown in the peculiar wall paintings of Corneto and Vulci. All these peculiarities in the way of dressing the hair are held by Professor Baudouin to prove that the image found in Vendee, cannot represent a European man of the age of copper or bronze.

It must, therefore, be taken to represent a man of the race it most resembles—the ancient Mayans of Central America, he asserts. Why there are not more carvings of the sort thereabout he does not explain.

Professor Baudouin believes the stone was a religious monument, perhaps an altar stone, remaining in the position in which it was placed by reverent prehistoric hands. He believes its position was decided by astronomical calculations, and points out that a line from the medallion to the foot points exactly to the setting sun at the Summer solstice. The foot seems to represent the pole, the support of the world.

The meaning of the groove on the strange French monument is another puzzling point. In the representations of prehistoric man of the age of copper in Sweden, the priests of the sun are shown playing on long copper trumpets. It might, therefore, be argued that the groove on the French monument represents a trumpet of this character. A similar symbolism is shown on many of the early Greek coins, which represent Apollo, the sun god, blowing a trumpet. Professor Baudouin, however, thinks the idea represented on his rock is that of a fecundation by the wind, well known in northern European folklore, and even in Greco-Roman archaeology.

In the case of this monument he thinks the sun is shown fertilizing the world with his powerful breath.

One of the interesting comments of Professor Baudouin on his discovery is that it proves American discovered Europe, instead of Europeans discovering America, as supposed. There are other modern scientists who have traced the widespread operations of the ancient Atalanteans.

Prof. Lewis Spence, one of the most distinguished British ethnologists, in a recent book, "The Problem of Atlantis," has pointed out how closely the statements of Plato agree with the evidence of countless prehistoric relics in Europe and America.

It was the destruction of Atlantis, he thinks, that gave the world the legend of the flood. It was in this lost land that the story of the Tower of Babel and the confusion of tongues originated. The Atlanteans first conceived the idea of an existence after death. They gave to Egypt its greatest god, Osiris, and the basic portions of "The Book of the Dead," in which are full directions for the conduct of the soul when it reaches the after-world, so Professor Spence argues.

Plato says that Atlantis was destroyed by a series of volcanic eruptions. Professor Spence says that volcanic matter has been dredged up from the ocean bottom in mid-Atlantic, in a condition which proves that it was erupted less than 15,000 years ago and that it cooled in the air before it was submerged. Therefore, much of the present ocean bed was above water less than 15,000 years ago.

Professor Spence believes there were two great land areas in the Atlantic, connected by a

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

ROGER KINGDOM, a self-made financial colossus called the Red Vandal, is anxious that his mother shall enjoy a place in society; but prim, old-fashioned Victoria Kingdom prefers to live quietly in her own corner of her son's great London mansion, The Deodars, with Esther Boothroyd her maid and companion of twenty years.

Sir Julian Coniston, a famous lawyer and financier, who has misappropriated funds to finance the tottering Hunyadi Copper Company, goes to Kingdom for assistance. Sir Julian has just finished the defense of Stella Charteris, condemned to die for the murder of her lover. She refuses to reveal her true identity but Coniston learns that she is the wife of the Red Vandal, who believes that she died in a railroad wreck after running away with another man.

The lawyer offers to set on foot the agitation necessary to save Stella if Kingdom wishes. He promises to say nothing about her identity, as the disclosure of the Vandal's relationship to Stella would ruin his social ambitions; and offers to help him climb the social ladder if Kingdom will bolster up Hunyadi Copper and save him from disgrace. The Red Vandal shows him the door.

Lois and Mike, the Earl of Cubbington and his lady, are the leaders of the Cubbington Crush, to which Sir Julian's daughter Beth belongs. They organize a treasure hunt, bribing Kingdom's butler to plant one of the clues in The Deodars. Beth and her partner Lucian Burke go to the Vandal's mansion where Beth climbs a trellis and is caught by Kingdom. He helps her find the clue and saves her from a dangerous fall. As his reward he invites himself along for the remainder of the hunt.

CHAPTER IV.

The Clutch of the Whirlpool.

ROGER KINGDOM, the Red Vandal, thrust Beth into the car. So quick was his action that she could not resist. He leaned over to Lucian Burke, and Beth, through her bewilderment and fury, saw his smile again, changed to menace and recognition.

"Drive on, Burke," he said. "I'm coming along." Their two faces looked into each other, the eyes of Lucian Burke, man-about-town and cosmopolitan adventurer, bright and watchful as those of a forest animal.

"Delighted to have you Kingdom," Burke said, lazily. "The Cubbingtons always welcome a new disciple."

The car sprang convulsively out of the drive. Beth Coniston sat a straight little figure by Burke's side. She ought by all the standards of the Cubbington Crush, to be laughing at that fantastic adventure. She had the Vandal in her hands to deliver as prey to the Cubbingtons who were expert at ragging. She herself ought to teach the boor a lesson he would never forget. But there was something clean and simple about him. He was all bone and sinew, in soul as well as in body. Soul! Did people still have such things?"

Suddenly Beth felt weary. The sense of impending doom which had haunted her all night came again. What caused it? The thought of that lonely man, her father? But he had always gently repulsed her and told her to run away on her own pleasures. He was taking drugs, she knew. Some great fear lay upon him. But the merry-go-round had caught them both up and snatched them apart. His friends and hers were all body and no soul. If they could only find each other again, as they had done before her mother's tragic death!

Thus Beth Coniston thought, deep beneath the sob of the whirlpool—too late.

The sun has not yet risen over High Willows, the country mansion of Lord and Lady Cubbington, where it lay deep among the woods and gorse of Berkshire. But the mullioned windows were ablaze with light, and in the milk-white mist before an Autumn dawn, a mass of empty motor-cars was crowded untidily in front of the dignified terraces. The owls in the trees had been scared away by the shouts of laughter which filled the house. The savor of ham and eggs, that classic breakfast of the night-reveller, pervaded the pillared banqueting hall. The treasure-hunt was finished.

"Priceless!" gasped Lois, Lady Cubbington, pressing her little doubled-up fist against her mouth, like an ecstatically-pleased child, and watching Roger Kingdom where he towered, gravely looking down upon little tow-headed Topsy Vane. Topsy Vane was "hot stuff." She had round baby eyes with curly lashes, but she had spent a week on a Thames barge, disguised as a boy—in order to learn the language, Mike Cubbington said—and killed a sandwichman with her car while crossing Trafalgar Square at forty-five an hour, after lunch, and driven with a forged license ever since. "Perfectly priceless! You are the giddy limit, Beth, to get hold of the Red Vandal like this. What shall we do with him? Mike suggests lights out suddenly and then tar and feathers for him. But that is rather stale."

"Very," returned Beth, dryly, "and it's possible the tar and feathers might get on to the wrong person."

She moved away from Lois. At this late stage of dissipation, Lois, Lady Cubbington, with a bottle of stout in one hand and a cigarette in the other, belonged rather too obviously to the cheap theatrical lodgings out of which Mike had married her.

"You look like a very beautiful fury, Beth," said Lucian Burke's voice, by her side.

"Do I?"

Burke's eyes seemed to wrap her and draw her to him. They made her feel like a child lost in a wood with things looking at her out of the thicket. Yet she liked Lucian Burke. Sometimes she thought she loved him. Love! It was a word the Cubbington Crush mouthed easily. She shivered, not for the first time that night. Was there a Puritan streak in her, after all?

"Do I look beautiful?" she demanded. "I put the question quite dispassionately."

"The most beautiful thing in the world to me," Burke answered. "You know it."

"Because I feel like most of these charming people look," ended Beth. "Streaky, dopey, bog-eyed and in need of a cold bath, a brush-up, and a spring-cleaning."

"You don't belong to them," Burke's hand had fallen upon hers. They were in an alcove among the palms, unseen. "You're not made for a Crush. You were fashioned for one man. You're a Worth While Woman, Beth, worth waiting for! How much longer have I to wait, little girl?"

"And you—" Beth's brain swam a little at the uncovered passion which lit Burke. He had kept it covered so carefully during their three month's reckless friendship. Now something had made it break forth like a waft of flame. "You don't belong here, Lucian, either. We're mostly young and—and mostly fools. You're neither. You're the Vandal's age and a bit—sinister. You've made love to such a lot of women, I seem to know. You're the only one who knows I'm just an ordinary woman and not such a hard-boiled little case as I seem. You know I'm a bit lonely and a bit—lost. You would never marry me. And the other kind of love. . . . I couldn't, Lucian! I think I must be old-fashioned and respectable after all, in spite of the things I say and do. I've just discovered that I've lost an important part of myself. It's—it's my soul, I think. I want to find it again. I want to go home. Let me go, Lucian!"

It was almost a sob that left Beth Coniston. She was struggling, wide-eyed and frightened, for Burke had caught her.

"I love you!" he murmured. "It's too late, Beth. We've both gone too far!"

"Don't!" She was defiant yet fluttering like a snared bird. "I've not gone too far. It's an ancient trick to say that Lucian. It doesn't make me swoon with terror, like my grandmother would have done."

She was on her feet. So, too, was Lucian Burke, his long delicate face full of passionate desire that went out like quenched fire as the vandal struck him on the jaw and sent him crashing to the parquet floor.

"Get up, Burke," Roger Kingdom said.

Burke came upright slowly. There was a little trickle of blood running down the side of his face, which was the color of a dead man's.

"Pray excuse us both. This is a deplorably dramatic and hackneyed kind of scene." Kingdom made a little bow to Beth, and then, to Lucian Burke where he leaned against the wall. "In here, Burke, if you please."

He threw open the door of a small conservatory. The steel cords of his fingers dropped upon the other man's shoulder, and twisted him through the doorway. The door closed, leaving Beth Coniston staring at it.

"Sit down, Burke." Roger Kingdom's voice came tonelessly. "I warn you I shall pound you to jelly if you move. You never loved physical violence did you? I want to talk. About Stella. You were the man she ran away with from Buenos Aires, Burke. I didn't find out until some time afterward. Oh, I haven't been searching the world for you in order to wreak revenge. I've been too busy—" a spasm touched Kingdom's lips—"but now I've found you, my interest in your love-affairs has revived."

There was silence save for the

If you have ever met a person with a real case of halitosis (bad breath) you can readily understand what a barrier to social or business success it would be. Imagine yourself in such a predicament.

As a matter of fact, the probabilities are that you do have halitosis frequently. Few escape it for the reason that every day, in normal mouths, odor-producing conditions (many of germ origin) develop. So, thousands have halitosis and are unable to detect it.

Since the risk is great and detection difficult, the wise thing to do is to definitely put your breath beyond suspicion by the daily use of full strength Listerine as a mouth wash and gargle. It both prevents halitosis and ends it, should it get the upper hand.

While safe and pleasant in action, full strength Listerine is a powerful germicide which kills even the stubborn Staphylococcus Aureus (pus) germ in 15 seconds. Naturally, it destroys lesser germs in the mouth. Furthermore, it's an active deodorant which overcomes odors of all kinds.

No fastidious person will omit the use of Listerine daily. Lambert Pharmacal Company.

sound of an improvised jazz-band, with kitchen utensils as instruments, which had started somewhere in Mike Cubbington's ancestral mansion.

Lucian Burke spoke. His smile was a mere distortion.

"You're a foolish sort of hog, Kingdom. Otherwise you would have stayed put in that Arabian Night's Palace of yours this evening. Stella chose me. It's all dead history. I refuse to talk about it. Tonight, you've marked me, you primitive clod. I'll mark you back if I have to wait for years. Not on your bull's body, but otherwise. You're a little emperor. But I'll find your weak spot I promise you that."

"You didn't stick to her, Burke." Kingdom spoke heavily, painfully. "You left her to go down hill alone. If you had stuck to her, let me divorce her, and married her, I would have forgiven you."

Lucian Burke made a satirical gesture. He was recovering his self-possession.

"You've got the reputation of being a simple soul, Kingdom. Not without reason I perceive. Poor Stella is dead. I will say nothing against her. That Latin tag, you know. De mortuis—"

Kingdom lifted his fist and dropped it.

"Yes," he said, mechanically, "Stella is dead."

He sat crouched slightly. Lucian Burke wiped his mouth with a handkerchief and stabbed him a slanting glance. Suddenly Roger Kingdom looked up.

"I order you to keep clear of that girl Beth, Burke," he said. "You understand?"

"Miss Coniston?"

"Coniston?" A flash of startled realization passed across Kingdom. It made him exult strangely. "Julian Coniston's daughter? These people only deal in Christian names. That's the only thing Christian among them I imagine. You will abandon your little love affair with Miss Coniston, Burke."

There was another silence. Lucian Burke surveyed warily the menace of Kingdom's attitude. He had fought formidable men for many things in his time. But none of them had ever robbed him of his woman. The woman usually saw to that.

Something happened at that instant. The cluster of lights above the two men blinked out, leaving darkness. An abrupt quiet and then a shout of scared laughter outside followed. Some practical joker, in a moment of inspiration, had turned out all the lights of High Willows.

"You simpleton, you born simpleton, Kingdom!" It was Burke's voice in the blackness, ringing with dark mirth. "Beth is mine already. You're too late, you mumping dolt!"

Kingdom sprang to the door. He flung it open with a crash that sent Burke staggering backwards. The long hall, every light extinguished, was full of noisy, groping shadows. But a streak of waning moonlight came through the windows and he saw Beth Coniston, where she still stood in the alcove. A great compassion swept over him, shaking him. It was as if he looked at her drowning face before he plunged for her. His hand fell gently but purposely on her wrist.

"We're getting out of this. It'll be better for both of us. Are you ready?"

"We?" Beth's upturned face, beneath its bright hair, was peaked yet challenging.

"You and I. Not Burke. I'm leaving him behind. He isn't in this act."

He swept her towards the open doors where a chill glow of dawn was etching in the giant chestnuts of High Willows. The touch of her warm skin broke loose some warm torrent which had been damned for many years in Roger Kingdom. His blood throbbed heavily in every artery. He felt intoxicated.

They were in the cool dawn-air beside Lucian Burke's car. Beth Coniston's small teeth were shut tight.

"What if I choose to stay?" she demanded. "What if I want to see the fun?"

"You don't." Kingdom was looking down at her, with a look that expressed a glowing ownership. He was alight with dreams of which he had been barely conscious all night. "This is all tinsel stuff. I came on this fool treasure-hunt because something made me. It was a miracle, I think. Or else destiny. Don't you believe in destiny? It made me find that idiotic Billikin for you, and caused me to come here to save you from—"

"From myself?" Beth demanded defiantly, though her voice faltered with weariness. "You seem likely to say that next. I've heard you were a terrible egotist. But I hardly thought you looked upon yourself as a kind of drummer for—for destiny."

"From Burke," Kingdom said, curtly. "Please get in. I'm taking you home."

The car hummed out of the wide-open gates of High Willows. Beth Coniston sat snuggled deep in her cloak. She had obeyed because she felt weak and tired. If the Vandal wished to be her chauffeur, he might. What had he done to Lucian? Her body felt soiled where Burke had touched her yet she could not shake off the fatalism that some day she might surrender. Beth Coniston, since she had entered the whirlpool, looked at life with what she though were fearless eyes. The cynical veneer of modern youth had grown about her soul. It had been the Cubbington Crush or else dreadful loneliness, since her mother had died. But her courage failed, and she felt sick and frightened at the night's happenings.

The man by her side looked down at her delicate profile, in the brightening dawn.

He was assailed for an instant with a strange terror at the mocking words Lucian Burke had cried out in the dark. Beth Coniston looked back at him with an expression in which she tried to force amusement. But she failed, and kept silent.

Roger Kingdom sat at the wheel of Lucian Burke's car as it slipped smoothly towards London. His being felt as if it moved in a dark glowing stream. Yes, something had happened to his dead heart. It had come to life again, indeed. Coniston's daughter! He felt blind with exultation and tenderness. Coniston should be saved. Coniston should have the money he craved. And in return. . . .

Stella!

Kingdom's knuckles were white on the wheel.

It was daylight now. London stretched its deserted streets about the big car, yawning slowly out of slumber, to look at a half-sleeping girl and a man who fought with devils and angels. The tall house in St. James' Square had a haggard look about it. Its blind-drawn windows looked like heavy-lidded eyes.

"Thank you." Beth stepped out stiffly to the curb. "I think you will make rather an original member of the Cubbingtons. If you will leave the car here I expect Lucian will come to claim it. Have you enjoyed this first night in the gay part of London society, Mr. Kingdom? It has been rather fantastic."

Kingdom glanced into the upturned face and brown eyes. She looked like a child on the edge of sobbing, in spite of her words.

"I will see you inside," he said. "Hullo, somebody is astir, already!"

The carved doors of Sir Julian Coniston's house were partly ajar. As Kingdom spoke the face of a manservant in dishabille appeared.

"Miss Beth!" It was Coniston's man, white as chalk. "Don't come in just now, miss. Keep away a little longer——"

"Something's happened!" Kingdom had sprung, tight-lipped up the steps.

"Only a few minutes ago," the man was stammering weakly, "Sir Julian, sir. We've telephoned for the police——"

Kingdom went forward. The lights still burned brightly in the library of Sir Julian Coniston, K. C., and Sir Julian Coniston was its sole occupant. He lay upon a couch with his face tranquil, powerful and fine, as it had been in the bygone days. Only a dabble of blood at the temple marred its waxen whiteness. His right hand, in which was clutched a small automatic pistol, hung down. The other lay upon his chest and a piece of paper was held in the stiffened fingers.

Roger Kingdom, the Red Vandal, took it and read the three words which were written upon it.

"Kingdom did this."

The library of Sir Julian Coniston's town house, where its owner lay dead at the feet of the man who had been his enemy, was full of a deep quietude; the great, careless tranquillity of death. Roger Kingdom, with his lips a tight line, stood, still holding the piece of writing which he had taken from the dead man's hand.

"Kingdom Did This."

His eyes were drawn to the bald, and accusing words fascinatedly, and then went again to the calm, fine face of the famous man who had tried to haggle a woman's worthless life to hide his own guilty act. Yet, how tranquil and without bitterness he looked! The ink was scarcely dry on that deadly accusation. Death—even if sudden and violent, like that — burned out hatred. The whirlpool did not always disfigure its victims when, at last, it cast them on the sands of eternity.

Kingdom came from his trance. A footstep had sounded behind him.

"Don't!" He swung around quickly, knowing with a strange mixture of pity and fear who it was. "Keep away, Beth—Miss Coniston! Something terrible has happened. You've got courage haven't you? You have need of it all now."

He stood in front of the couch and what it held, big and protective. Then he saw the girl's wide look go down to the slip of paper between his fingers. The blood ran back to his heart in dread as he crushed it and hid it in his palm.

"You must let me see him." Beth's voice came draggingly. "I can stand it. Someway, I have known, all night, that something was going to happen, something like this. Oh, stand away, will you? What right have you to keep me from him? He was mine and we both forgot—forgot—"

She was on her knees, looking at the sleeping face, but not touching it. In a way, she felt terribly calm before that great catastrophe. As she bent a little closer, one of the jade and silver Billikins she had collected that night fell to the carpet. It brought the shrill laughter of the Cubbington Crush back to her, and made her flinch. Then she turned her stricken look to the man who stood silently gazing down at her.

"He must have been very desperate," she said slowly. "Something drove him to it. Some business enemy, I think. Men kill each other that way, sometimes. You're a financier. Have you any idea who it might be?"

"No," Kingdom answered.

"I shall find out," Beth Coniston said. "And I shall never rest until I have had my revenge. I might have to wait for years. But I shall get it at last. If I could swear some sort of oath now over—over his body, I would do so."

"Don't!" said Kingdom sharply.

The girl, coming to her feet, stumbled a little and his arms were about her for a moment, even while the piece of paper burned his closed hand.

Passion Island by Juanita Savage

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

BEAUTIFUL JOAN ALLISON, step-daughter of Sir Antony and Lady Tregenna, has a reputation as a siren whose chief amusement is breaking men's hearts. Her career is brought to a crisis when Peter Merrifield commits suicide for love of her and his wife publicly denounces Joan as a vampire and threatens to revenge her husband's death.

To allow the scandal time to blow over, Joan accepts an invitation from the wealthy Vandeerings, of San Francisco, for a yachting cruise to the South Seas. Miriam Merrifield follows her to America and almost succeeds in stabbing her before she is rescued by Hilary Sterling.

Sterling says that he is Australian, but talks like an English gentleman. The Vandeerings invite him for the remainder of their house party, and Joan learns that Hilary is the owner of a pearl fishery on the tropical island of Muava, called Passion Island by the natives. They become inseparable and Sterling falls in love with Joan.

When he tells her passionately of his love she repulses him, denying that she has led him on. He denounces her as a heartless siren and tells her that his love-making was a joke. Joan is furious that anyone should attempt to trifle with her. But Hilary is really desperately in love and is only playing a part to try to hide his own hurt.

When the Vandeerings' yacht Frisco Belle, reaches the South Seas Joan is ready to surrender to love, but when she meets Hilary again he mocks her about the happenings in San Francisco and she determines to make him fall in love with her and then humiliate him as he has humiliated her.

Sterling kidnaps her in a motor boat and starts for Passion Island, vowing to teach her the meaning of love and suffering. Peter Merrifield was his best friend and he intends to avenge him. They encounter a tropical storm and Joan is ready to confess her love, but when they land on Passion Island she is afraid to because Hilary boasts that he will win her love and then toss it aside.

"All's fair in love, Joan," Whispered Hilary. "I warn you I shall take every advantage."

CHAPTER IX.

"Which Will It Be?"

JOAN strolled out to the veranda, accepted a cigarette, and settled herself comfortably in the deck chair Hilary placed for her. Coffee, delicious black coffee made from beans (Hilary told her) grown on the hillsides of Muava, was served by Ugi, who asked a question of his master.

"Shall Ugi bring other fella bottle with picaninny glass?" inquired Hilary of Joan. "He means do we want liqueurs. I can offer you some Welfsmidt Kummel if would care for it."

"No, thank you, nothing more," said Joan. "You seem to have practically everything you could wish for here," she added, as Ugi withdrew.

"I have everything now that you are here, Joan," Hilary replied.

Joan ignored the compliment and sipped her coffee.

"Did you have trouble in training and teaching your servants?" she inquired, after a pause. "They are still practically savages, I suppose."

"Yes, at heart they are still cannibals and head-hunters, as are the tribes in the interior, and periodically they revert to real savagery," Hilary replied. "Fortunately, however, they stand in awe of white men and regard me as a sort of paramount chief versed in witchcraft, otherwise my head ere this would be decorating some headman's hut."

"How did you manage to transform them into such expert servants?"

"By patience, persuasion, kindness, bribes, threats, and occasional cruelty—the same methods as I shall employ to win your love, Joan. Muava has taught me something. What is it Kipling says somewhere? 'The things you will learn from the Yellow an' Brown, they'll 'elp you a lot with the White.'"

He spoke quite calmly and deliberately, and Joan's fair face crimsoned again.

"If you imagine you can intimidate me into loving you, you are very much mistaken," she exclaimed warmly. "Hilary, you are carrying your practical joke too far. You insult me by your threat to treat me as a native."

"'The Colonel's Lady an' Judy O'Grady are sisters under their skins,'" quoted Hilary, with his tantalizing, enigmatic smile. "Love, my dear Joan, is not a joke, although you have treated it as such most of your life. I brought you here to teach you that love can mean suffering as well as rapture. You have lived an artificial life and mingled with people who mostly make a jest of love and life. Now you are in touch with the primitive. Here you are no longer a society belle to be worshiped, pampered and petted by a circle of male admirers. Here you are merely a woman, and women are chattels in Muava."

"If you are trying to persuade me you have reverted to savagery, I don't believe it," exclaimed Joan. "You are trying to frighten me. Hilary, please stop this fooling and be your own natural self again."

"Perhaps you are seeing my 'natural self' for the first time," said Hilary. "How do you know that I have not been playing a part ever since we first met?"

"You are only playing a part now," Joan responded. "You can't mean what you said about 'avenging' Peter Merrifield. At San Francisco you said you understood I was not to blame for what happened, and apologized for having doubted me."

"That was before I had myself been victimized," said Hilary gravely, throwing away his cigarette. "You made me believe for a long time that I, and most of the rest of the world, had cruelly misjudged you, and that you were incapable of breaking a heart in jest. Almost you persuaded me that you had fallen in love with me, almost induced me to make a fool of myself as so many other men had done."

"You are cruelly unjust!" protested Joan. "I didn't mean to lead you to believe I loved you at first, and what happened at Bora Bora was to pay you out for the way you treated me at San Francisco, as I have told you before. It isn't fair to treat me in this fashion, Hilary, and to be so cruel and sardonic. Don't make me hate you."

"I intend to make you love me, Joan," Hilary responded in a low voice. "Afterwards—but the future will take care of itself. 'Why fret about it if today be sweet?' as old Omar said. How shall I woo you to win you? Shall I tell you that you are the most beautiful, alluring, seductive girl in the world, and that merely to look at you sets me afire with longing? Shall I tell you that your kisses are nectar, and I hunger to hold you close in my arms again and feel your lips on mine, to look deep into your blue eyes and try to fire your heart with ardor? How shall I induce you to creep gladly into my arms and whisper in your sweet, husky voice that you love me and confess yourself conquered?"

He bent forward and captured Joan's hands as he spoke, gripping them tightly and drawing her towards him.

"Kiss me, Joan, and confess that you love me," he continued, his eyes glowing. "Kiss me and admit you are glad you are mine."

"No, I—I don't want to kiss you," exclaimed Joan rather breathlessly, her heart in a flutter. "Please let me go. It isn't playing the game, Hilary, to try to take advantage in this way. It isn't fair!"

Her heart was bidding her surrender, but pride was still paramount. She felt that Hilary was still playing a part and making mock of her, trying to persuade her to confess her love in order to laugh at her and take his revenge for what had happened at Bora Bora. Her whole nature rebelled at the idea of confessing herself mastered and finding her love spurned.

"All's fair in love, Joan," whispered Hilary. "I warn you I shall take every advantage."

But he released Joan's hands and rose to his feet as he said the words, produced his case from his breast pocket, and proceeded to light another cigarette.

"What about taking a stroll?" he resumed, his manner again changing. "I promised to show you some of the beauties of Muava, and I feel sure you don't want to spend the whole day here on the veranda."

"I suppose a little exercise will do me no harm," said Joan, in tones as matter-of-fact as his own, although her heart was still beating unsteadily.

She was completely mistress of herself again as they strolled together down the broad, shady path that led from the bungalow to the native village, which consisted of a huge, oval-shaped house roofed with grass, surrounded by huts of all shapes and sizes, backed by palms and fronted by a stretch of greensward bordering on the beach. From the huts and the main building crowds of half-naked men and women, and throngs of stark naked children, came tumbling into the open to pay homage to their white lord and master and to stare in awe and wonder at Joan. A hideous native with a wrinkled, tattooed face approached and bowed low to Joan, and Hilary explained he was the headman giving her greeting and welcoming her to Muava when the chief gabbled out a long speech and indicated by expressive gestures that all she could see was at her disposal.

Native girls came forward with garlands of flowers which they hung round Joan's neck, Hilary being likewise decorated.

"You would blush if you understood what they are saying, Joan," remarked Hilary, with a chuckle.

"Why, what are they saying?" enquired Joan, intrigued.

"They are expressing the hope that you will have many, many children, and that you will always be beautiful in the eyes of your husband," explained Hilary, and chuckled again as the warm color stained Joan's fair face.

"What a horrible wish!" Joan exclaimed, annoyed with herself for having asked the question. "Let's go. I hate being stared at, and some of the men are positively repulsive to look at."

"I'd better not translate that last remark," said Hilary. "The chief has just said you are so beautiful that you must have come straight from heaven and all the gods are jealous of me."

He made a little speech of thanks in the native tongue, then led Joan away from the village through a grove of flowering shrubs, all ablaze with many-colored exotic blossoms, the perfume of which was almost overpowering. Fruit, too, was growing in profusion, gorgeously colored birds flitted across the path and parakeets screeched from the tree-tops.

"Muava certainly seems to be a sort of earthly Paradise as far as outward appearance goes," commented Joan, drawing a long breath. "I have never seen anything quite so beautiful."

"It is an Eden, but hitherto without an Eve," Hilary responded, his eyes twinkling. "You have my leave to exercise all your arts of temptation without fear of being expelled in consequence. Does the prospect please you?"

"'Where every prospect pleases and only man is vile,'" murmured Joan, without looking at him. "What are those natives doing away along the beach?"

"Dredging pearl shell," answered Hilary. "That is my pearl fishery. Sounds romantic, but it is very smelly, for the fish are left to decay in the sun. Quite interesting, though, for there is always the chance of finding a pearl worth a fortune. But we won't go along there now or you might lose your appetite for dinner. We'll go back by another path, and I'll show you my little coffee plantation and my vineyard beside the jungle."

He conducted Joan along what seemed like an avenue of banana trees and cocoanut palms, chatting idly meanwhile. Joan listened abstractedly, still wondering if he were acting a part, wondering uneasily if it could be possible he was in earnest about compelling her to confess herself conquered. Her foot caught in the snake-like tendril of some creeping plant, and she tripped, clutching involuntarily at Hilary to save herself from falling. Instantly Hilary's arms went around her, crushing her close to his breast, and before Joan quite realized what was happening he was kissing her hungrily and passionately.

"I love you, Joan, I love you, love you," he whispered between kisses. "Say you are glad you are mine, darling. Confess that you love me."

Joan was passive in his arms. Somehow she did not want to make any effort to escape. She felt as if he were drugging her with kisses and making her subject to his will, felt as if her own will power was deserting her.

"Answer me, Joan," commanded Hilary breathlessly, taking her face between his two hands and compelling her to look into his eyes. "Do you love me?"

"No!" burst out Joan, suddenly realizing how near she was to surrendering. "Oh, for heaven's sake let me go! Surely you have humbled me enough! I won't confess. I won't kiss you!"

Hilary sighed and released her, and the light died out of his eyes.

"I remember telling you Passion Island was a mixture of heaven and hell," he said, after a long pause. "You have it in your power to make it which you will for yourself. Shall we walk on?"

CHAPTER X.

A Narrow Escape.

BOTH Joan and Hilary were silent for a few minutes. Joan was trembling slightly and her mind was again in a turmoil. Again she found herself wondering if Hilary's mind had become unhinged, or if his strange behavior was all part of some preconceived scheme. She darted a side-glance at him to see he was walking along with an abstracted air, smiling grimly.

"If I could only guess what is in his mind!" thought Joan.

"That is my coffee plantation over there on the left, and below it is my orange grove," said Hilary, as calmly as if nothing had happened. "Muava is such a land of plenty that it is difficult to induce the natives to work. When one lives rent free and has only to stretch out one's hand for food, money counts for nothing."

"I suppose so," Joan said absently, inwardly annoyed and disturbed to find him apparently so little affected.

"You would think that in such a land of plenty the natives would be happy, contented and peaceful," Hilary went on, "yet at times they make war on each other. None of my people dare penetrate far into the jungle for fear of being ambushed and killed, and they keep scouts posted to give warning in case the tribes in the interior make an attempt to raid our village, as they have tried to do on several occasions."

"I seem to remember your telling me something of the sort months ago," drawled Joan. "As Muava is such a dangerous place, I am surprised that you should bring a woman to it merely to gratify your own vanity."

Hilary flashed a swift glance at her, and she saw her shot had gone home, for his tanned face flushed slightly and his lips tightened involuntarily.

"I seem to remember your telling me that a spice of danger made life worth living," he retorted.

Again there was silence between them for a time as they walked slowly along together through a sort of fairyland of tropical beauty. The languorous air was heavy with the scent of many exotic blossoms, around which fluttered gorgeously-colored butterflies. It was a scene of almost fantastic beauty, but Joan, lover of beauty though she was, was in no mood to appreciate its loveliness.

"It is very hot," she complained, beginning to feel the silence unbearable. "I feel fagged. Shall we go back now?"

"As you will," answered Hilary. "We have a long night before us, so perhaps you had better take a rest before the evening festivities."

"I don't want to take part in any native festivities," exclaimed Joan rebelliously. "I loathe the idea of having to spend the evening amongst a lot of hideous, grinning, gaping savages."

"I am afraid you cannot refuse to take part," said Hilary quietly but decisively. "The festival is in your honor—yours and mine—and you will sit with me in the high seat of abundance."

"Are you dictating to me?" asked Joan, her eyes mutinous.

Hilary shrugged his shoulders. "The heat at times makes some people rather peevish and inclined to be quarrelsome," he remarked. "You will feel better after another swim, or a dip in the pool in the clearing behind the bungalow. I am sure you will be glad to know I have some tea in the store, and Kuku knows how to brew it. A cup of tea will soothe you, I expect."

"Don't irritate me by talking as if I were a peevish child!" exclaimed Joan in annoyance. You are driving me to desperation by your behavior."

"You can hardly complain, since you drove me to desperation," responded Hilary, with a sigh and a shrug. "You must remember, my dear Joan, that you have obligations to fulfill even here in Muava. However irritated you may be, you can hardly affront me and the natives by declining to take part in the festival in your honor. Besides, it might injure your dignity and your prestige if you drove me into taking you to the feast by force."

Joan halted suddenly and faced him, her blue eyes blazing, her hands clenched.

"You wouldn't dare!" she burst out. "Surely you haven't sunk so low as to threaten to humiliate me before a crowd of savages? Hilary, you wouldn't be so cruel!"

"My dear girl, please don't be unreasonable," replied Hilary, with maddening calmness. "Is it unreasonable to expect you to attend a festival arranged in your honor, and to protest against the idea of disappointing our hosts? The festival without you would be like 'Hamlet' without the ghost or a wedding minus the bride. The heat is certainly very trying, but you will feel better after you have rested for an hour or two and refreshed yourself with a cup of tea."

Again Joan felt as if she wanted to box his ears, and she bit her lips in sheer vexation as she walked on quickly. Hilary kept pace with her, pretending to have difficulty in regulating his stride to her own, and continually "changing step," army fashion, a fact which served to increase Joan's irritation until her latent sense of humor came into play, and she laughed involuntarily.

"Are you practising some new kind of dance step?" she asked, as they neared the bungalow.

"Yes, rather effective, don't you think?" answered Hilary promptly, slipping his arm round her waist and compelling her to prance along the path with him. "The Muava Fox Trot, very specially invented to suit the step of Miss Joan Allison, and dedicated to her by her frequent victim but fervent admirer, Hilary Sterling, now her only available dancing partner. Set to appropriate music it might become all the rage in fashionable circles."

"Don't be so utterly ridiculous!" protested Joan, still laughing in spite of herself, and disengaging herself from his encircling arm. "Are you quite crazy?"

"Quite!" said Hilary unsmilingly, but with a twinkle in his eyes. "Crazy with love for you. The skipper of the trading schooner, by the way, which calls here about once every three months is fond of singing, when he has consumed about a bottle of rum, an old music hall song the refrain of which is something about 'Give me your answer, do. I'm most crazy all for the love of you. It won't be a stylish marriage, for I can't afford a carriage, but you'll look sweet upon the seat of a bicycle made for two.'"

He sang the refrain of the old music-hall song in a deep, mellow baritone voice, affecting a Cockney accent and a semi-drunken hiccough which Joan found irresistably funny and caused temporarily to forget her resentment.

"'Daisy, Daisy, give me yer answer do'," carolled Hilary, then broke off. "Yes, that's how the chorus starts. The old-fashioned music-hall must have been wonderful. By the way, partner, I noticed when we were dancing the Muava Fox Trot you started off with the left foot. That's all wrong, and unlucky to boot, or shoe, as the case may be. Always start right foot first. Petronius wrote that it is unlucky to enter or leave one's chamber left foot foremost. Pythagoras and Iamblichus both taught that the right shoe should be put on first to propitiate the gods. I am rather superstitious in that matter, and always take care to step off with the right foot first, as the Romans did, when I am embarking on a new venture. I stepped off the Frisco Belle right foot foremost."

"Presumably I must have stepped off with the left foot, as I am unlucky enough to find myself here," commented Joan.

She did not know what to make of Hilary, and wondered if he had, in fact, become mentally unbalanced. His sudden changes of manner were disturbing, to say the least of it, and Joan found it impossible to decide how to deal with a man who, so to speak, made passionate love to her one moment, treated her with indifference the next, threatened her with violence, made mock of her, behaved like an exuberant youth, sang a music-hall chorus, and then talked of Petronius, Pythagoras and Iamblichus and Roman superstitions.

"Time will tell if either of us is unlucky," said Hilary. "Meanwhile I am glad you have recovered the art of smiling."

Arrived at the bungalow, he summoned servants, gave orders for tea to be prepared for Joan, and bade Rena attend her white mistress.

"I hope you won't mind if I don't take tea with you and leave you to your own resources for an hour or two, Joan?" he said, after giving his orders. "I am going to bathe, and afterwards must make sure everything is in readiness for our festival."

Joan merely nodded, and seated herself with a sigh on one of the veranda chairs. Ugi and Rena served tea, much in the manner it might have been served in an English drawing room, and stood like bronze statues behind Joan's chair until she dismissed them with a gesture.

"What can I do, and what does Hilary mean to do?" Joan asked herself, making herself comfortable in her long chair after enjoying an excellent cup of tea. "Is he daft, I wonder or is all this bluff?"

She found it impossible to answer her own questions, but she could not find it in her heart to believe that Hilary would harm her in any way, despite all he had said. What fretted her mind most was the uncertainty as to whether Hilary was actually in love with her, or if he was merely pretending. Joan could not even decide if he had been in earnest at Bora Bora, or had been playing a part and repeating the passionate incident of San Francisco.

It would be ghastly if I confessed I love him and he laughed at me and told me he had no use for me," she soliloquized. "I should die of shame, I think. Oh, I didn't know love could hurt so! How dare he treat me like this!"

Seldom had Joan felt more unsettled in mind or less sure of herself as she rose from her chair after an hour of hard thinking and vain speculation and strolled down to the beach, which, for once in a way, was practically deserted. She saw the motor boat moored alongside a roughly-constructed jetty, and the idea of escaping in it flashed into her mind.

Acting on impulse, she jumped down from the jetty into the boat, and Rena, who had followed her from the house, cried out in frightened protest:

"Him boat tabu! Belong big fella marster. He say he shoot up plenty too much any fella who try make him walk along. Me fright along you too much. Big fella marster he cross along you, Mary woman."

Joan understood her meaning—that Hilary had told the natives the motor boat was taboo, and that he would shoot anyone who tried to sail in it—and she smiled.

"Boat he belong me as much as big fella marster," she assured Rena as she started the engine. "You come along."

"Me fright along you too much," repeated Rena, looking very scared and shaking her head vigorously.

Joan shrugged her shoulders and started the boat, heading out to sea and paying no heed to the native girl's cries of protest.

When we're anxious to look our best . . . which is really almost always . . . how short-sighted it is to "have no time for a bath."

They're so easy, when one gets the daily or twice-daily habit. And the rewards are so great.

For the bath brings us something in beauty and in personality that can be had in no other manner . . . that comes from no cosmetics jar or beauty treatment. Not poise only, or self-assurance. Not even the clearer, more vivid skin. Something nearer to charm, daintiness, and "the kind of beauty called elusive."

Having beautiful hands

While the hands and nails require more frequent cleansing, their pink-and-whiteness after the bath is proof of how attractive they can and should be kept throughout the day.

Soap-scrub them in warm water just as often as you get the chance. And push the cuticle back from the nails with the towel while drying. Little else is needed you'll find, except for occasional shaping and polishing, to keep nails looking their very best.

A single rule about complexions

Do you want a better complexion?... to keep the fine unblemished skin you already have? Then remember: if there is one complexion rule that never should be broken, it is this: Wash your face thoroughly, at least once a day with soap and water.

All skins are invisibly oily. "Dirt" is oily, as well as gritty and harsh. It takes soap and water, the real cleanser, to break this film; to again free the pores; to stimulate, invigorate, and re-condition the skin of your face.

Then there's our clothes

Clean bodies, of course, deserve clean clothes. It is only cleanliness of the 100% and all-around kind that makes one truly "dainty", "charming", or "exquisite".

And the best part of it is that clothes wear longer when not over-worn. It isn't merely in the case of silk stockings that perspiration, sharp-cutting dirt and plain over-soiling are the chief enemies to satisfactory wear. This applies to all our clothes.

The best rule here is also simple: Anything that is doubtful is definitely too soiled to wear.

The greatest beauty secret

Beauty! How we all strive for it! (And rightly so.)

But how prone we are to forget that the greatest aid to beauty, beyond all question, anyone may have: real cleanliness of body, face, hands, hair, clothes, and all the little details.

3 DAYS...

...when Mum means most

Most women have discovered the need of Mum to guard the under-arm from all taint.

But protection from the odors of perspiration is only half the story!

Mum performs its most important service on the sanitary napkin!

For Mum is a true deodorant. It neutralizes the most unpleasant odors as fast as they arise. Not the least offensive vapor can penetrate a protective film of Mum. Just spread it lightly on the napkin. You'll be serenely safe—all day. If you rely on anything short of this positive protection you are almost certain to offend.

There are numerous ways Mum can contribute to daintiness of person. But none is so vital as this napkinal use—to neutralize odors which the sheer dresses of today cannot confine. Use Mum at this trying time, and remain your confident self. This snowy cream is quite harmless to the most delicate skin or fabric.

Mum is not expensive; especially in the 60c jars, which give you almost three times the quantity of the 35c size. All druggists.

ONE MOTHER TELLS ANOTHER —and So

Today, as the result of over 40 years of recommendation, Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion is bringing tens of thousands of babies thru teething time without pain.

It is the actual prescription of a famous baby specialist, and contains no narcotics. Just rub it on the gums and pain ends at once. Use it from the first sign of teething until the last tooth appears—and you will have a happy, healthy baby.

Read this letter from one gratified mother, Mrs. Frank B. Johnston, Philadelphia, Pa., "My baby was cross and fretful during the teething period. Our physician recommended Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion and from then on I hadn't any trouble. It was a great comfort to my baby."

And Mrs. M. Vanderslice writes, "Painful teething periods hold no more anxiety for me since I discovered your wonderful remedy. My baby suffered intense pain accompanied by fevers and after trying various remedies without relief, a friend, a nurse of wide experience, recommended Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion which helped immediately to ease the pain."

Closets Convenient and Colorful

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

EVERY woman knows that if she were asked how she would go about building a house, she would reply, "I'd start first with a closet in every room and build a house around them." No housewife ever has enough closets and storage space! Perhaps she is thinking of a little cottage in the country and how to make it more convenient; or possibly how to get more space from the limited apartment closet into which so many Winter belongings must be stuffed. Whether she is building new, or making over old, the convenient closet should be studied in the light of modern fittings and accessories.

Of course the old-fashioned roomy closet has disappeared with its companion, the roomy kitchen. Space is at such a premium that it must be studied and utilized to the utmost. Therefore the newer closets are more shallow and less wide, and often less high. A good closet plan need not measure more in depth than the width of a garment hanger. A row of eight of these set together will accommodate dresses, while a special partition will conveniently separate the heavier coat or outer garment.

Today the closet door is almost as important as the closet itself. For one attaches to it racks to hold shoes, hats, umbrellas and bags. Several of these convenient wire or light metal rods keep as many as eight pairs of shoes separate, neat and in shape. Other rods have a recess for the hat, and are fitted with a row of hooks underneath on which to hang umbrellas, bags, etc.

The good closet contains small stocking and glove drawers at one side. These need not be more than a foot deep by four or six inches wide, to contain gloves, scarfs, stockings and similar small fitments. A good plan is to start such an upright row of boxes at the extreme side of the closet and cut off the top box slantingly to make for easier hanging of the clothes adjacent to it. The clever home carpenter can buy outfits and sets of small drawers and boxes of different sizes in the white or unfinished wood, and easily install and pack them against a closet wall.

The hat stand has come to stay. They may be purchased for a dime apiece, and cleverly nailed fast to the closet shelf, so that they will not knock over. Some of the hat stands come in a sturdy wire, which ends in a wire flower which is thus more of a decorative feature to the shelf. In any case the closet shelf should be padded for greater softness, and may be covered with chintz, cretonne or oilcloth. Indeed, this latter material is having a popular vogue as a covering for closet shelves, doors, hat boxes and even the walls, since it makes a very decorative, but easily washed surface.

Other decorators are using wall paper in bright stripes of the candy type, or with stars and other modernistic motives as the lining of the closet. In some cases the closet is left as part of the room and equipped and decorated as a powder room or dressing table nook which was a popular plan for the beauties and belles of the colonial era. Here one of the typical make-up tables with its opening top and partitions underneath is useful and very smart.

How to do away with the closet floor which is always a dust trap is solved by making a false floor or a slanting shelf raised about a foot and a half from the floor level. This gives a place for shoes, dust-free, and is the plan followed in some hospital closets where the floor is at least eighteen inches from the room floor level. In this way it is practically a shelf, and thus much more useful.

In most towns there are stores which specialize in unfinished wood furniture. Often a department store carries an excellent assortment of small adaptable pieces. The various glove boxes, shoe boxes, stocking boxes, which can now be bought so inexpensively, and which are covered only with paper, may be made more durable as well as more gay by treating to a couple of coats of quick-drying lacquer paint. By purchasing several sets of these and an upright nest of short drawers, one may make a most convenient covered-closet which will give fully as much service as a very expensive dresser. Also there are firms who specialize in making mill work or wood fixtures sold direct, and they have sets of trays or shallow drawers, separate units which might be used to hold furs, etc., all of which can be combined by the home carpenter.

Indeed, another suggestion is to make a special cedarwood closet at the top, having it small, but lined with cedarwood which may be bought from any lumber company. By lining a section of the closet with cedar, it will be a mothproof storage for coat, neck piece, etc. The very useful fiber board material used to make walls may be utilized in making doors, shelves and other surfaces to the closet without heavy wood. That is, a sheet of such board may be bound with narrow wood strips and made to hang exactly like a heavier door. Or another idea is to take the usual inexpensive screen door, which allows good ventilation, paint it to match the trim, and back it with a colored curtain or shirring. Thus such a door when backed by a decorative piece of tapestry, or when it has such a length of cretonne or Indian print hung in front of it, will be entirely unnoticed in the room.

Mystery of the Ancient Stone Face on the Ocean-Covered Altar

chain of islands. One of them he calls Atlantis, the other Antilia. The fragments of the latter are now represented by the West Indies.

About 25,000 years ago the first of these people set foot in Europe. They are called Cro-Magnons, because their bones were first found near a village of that name in France. They conquered the Neanderthal brutemen and decorated the rocks with extraordinary realistic paintings of animals.

No civilization is known before this in Europe, and therefore it must have come from the west. Professor Spence believes the Cro-Magnons came from the Atlantic islands by way of a land bridge that still connected it with Europe.

Sixteen thousand years ago, thinks Professor Spence, a second great wave from the islands reached Europe, bringing many new inventions. These men are called Aurignacians. At a much later date, ten to seven thousand years ago, there came a third invasion of these people around the Bay of Biscay region. The men of this migration are called Azil-Tardenoisians. This was about the time of the final catastrophe that overwhelmed the Atlantic islands with the exception of the few now remaining.

The mysterious face found in Vendee may be connected with this period.

The pre-Columbian civilization of America is linked with "Atlantis" by Professor Spence. Researches of modern archaeology show that the culture of the Mayas and Toltecs, who preceded the Aztecs and whose great cities lie ruined in the jungles of Yucatan and Central America, sprang suddenly into being without any preliminary development. If the culture had developed where it was found there would be traces of that development.

In all the legends of the Mayans and the Aztecs their most important god, Quetzalcoatl, is represented as having came from "a land in the waters to the east, called Atzlan," bringing with him the arts of agriculture, architecture and so on. That implies that he came from "Atlantis."

Neptune's favorite son was called Atlas, and he, according to the Greek myth, bore the world on his shoulders. Quetzalcoatl is frequently represented like Atlas carrying the world on his shoulders.

The Mexican legends of the flood are similar to the Biblical one. Noah figures under the name, Nala, and his wife is called Nena.

Other scientists have helped to build up the legend of "Atlantis." Professor Rundze, the eminent botanist, has pointed out that the banana is a seedless plant, which must have taken an unthinkably long time to cultivate. It is found in Asia and Central America, but could not have been taken from one to the other. It must have originated in a land midway between them.

Professor Pierre Termier, Director of Science of the Geological Chart of France, a geologist of the highest standing and authority, called the attention of the Institut Oceanographique of Paris to discoveries made in the Summer of 1898 by a ship laying the cable between Brest and Cape Cod. While trying to fish up a broken cable about five hundred miles north of the Azores and at a depth of 1,700 fathoms, or approximately two miles, the trawls brought up evidence that the bottom of the sea at that point had once been above the surface of the sea. This evidence was lava, molten rock from volcanoes. Lava always solidifies in one way when cooled under atmospheric pressure and in another way when cooled under water. The lava in question had been solidified in air. The volcanoes from which it had been emitted must then at that time have been above water.

And now they were two miles under it. The bottom of the sea in the vicinity had all the characteristics of a mountainous country, with high summits, deep slopes and deep valleys. It had, in fact, all the characteristics of a submerged country.

There is much more evidence of a lost land in the Atlantic, but whether it was submerged before or after man appeared on earth is a question still to be answered.

SUNBURNED

PYROL... and 45 Seconds

Cools Flaming Blistered Skin
AS IF BY MAGIC

ALONG the green Fairway on a summer's morning, life is one sweet song. But the song soon changes to a minor key when the sun gets in his deadly work—leaving the painful parch of sun-blistered skin.

But no need now to fear sunburn. Have Pyrol close at hand always, as your bodyguard, in your golf club locker; at the beach; in your car; at home. It cools, soothes the pain of burn instantly. Takes the hot, dry parch out of flaming skin—and healing begins at once. Or better still, apply it before exposure to the sun. It will protect—will prevent painful burn.

Pyrol is new, different—a better dressing for burns, scalds and all skin irritations. Practically odorless, easy to apply—easy to remove. Though never before advertised nationally, it has been prescribed by physicians for 20 years. It is the standard dressing in fire departments, leading hospitals and railroads where immediate and dependable relief from painful injuries must be available at all times. Now at all druggists', 50 cents—in the big red tubes. Kip Corporation, Los Angeles.

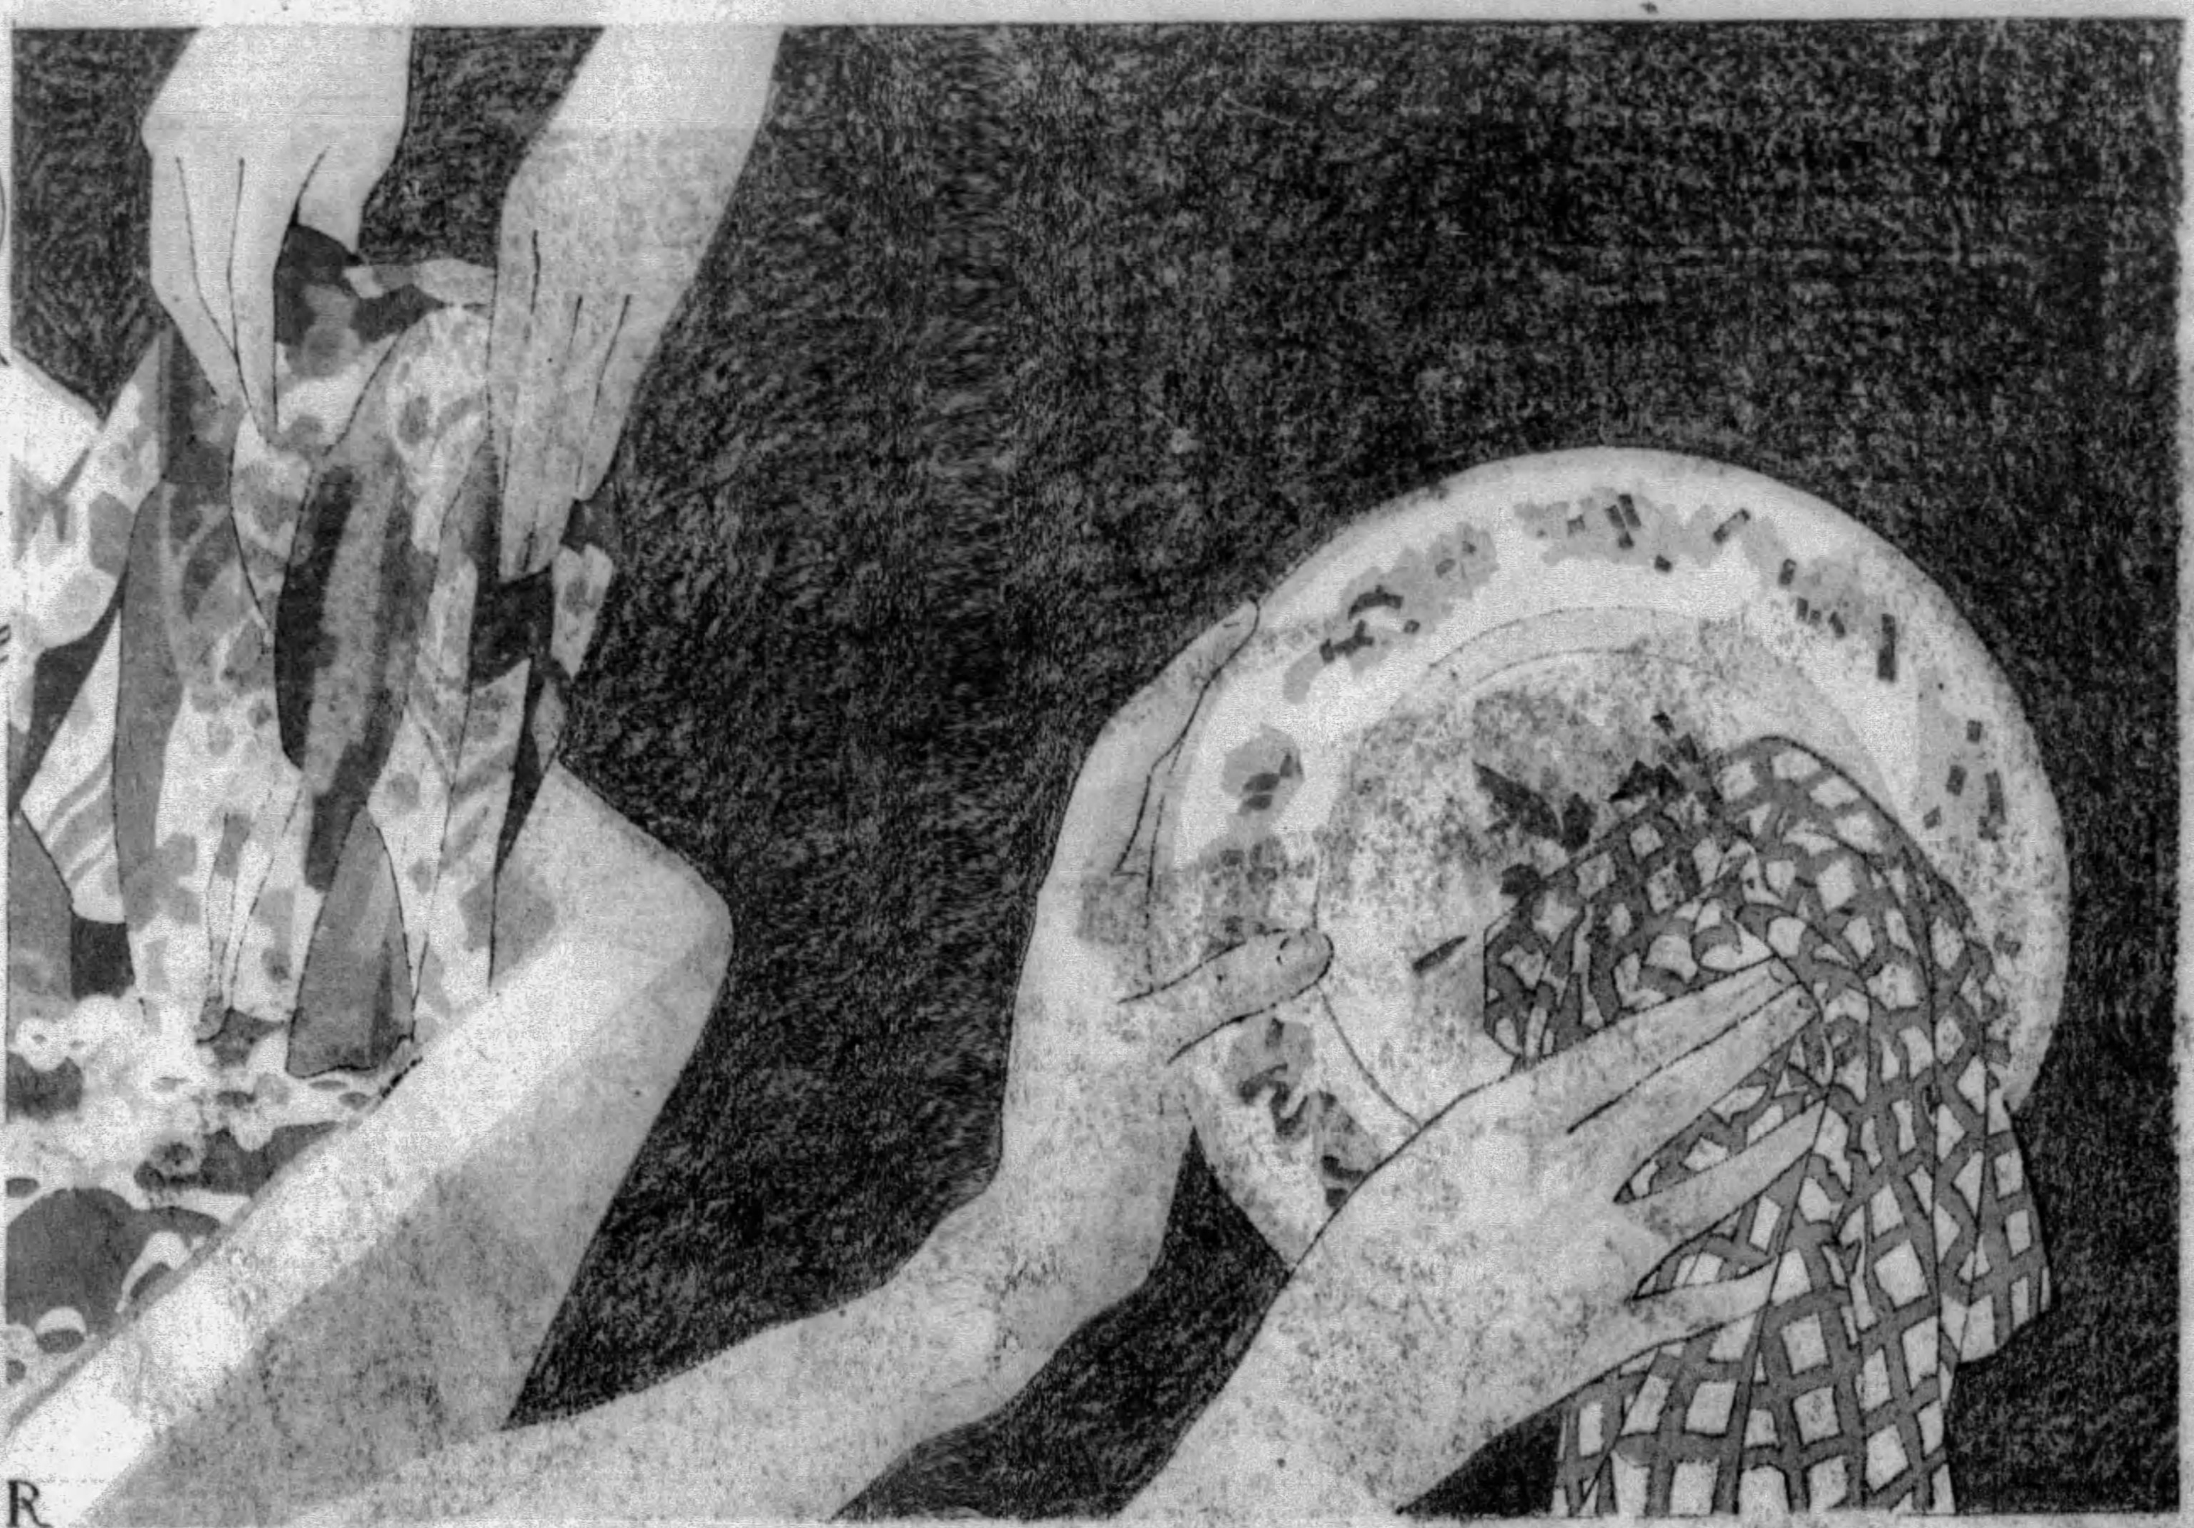
"Card playing does show up the hands! For time and again when we've been playing bridge a friend has asked me how I keep my hands looking as if they don't have any work to do The minute I tell her I use Ivory for everything she understands."



"I use Ivory Flakes for all my colored clothes—cotton as well as silk—and Ivory Flakes or Ivory Soap for my dishes Every soap task in my house is an Ivory task because I've decided that I want to keep my hands looking as smooth and white as though I had a maid."

She hasn't a maid - but her hands started this beauty talk

"I found that experts advise Ivory for fine furniture. A cloth wrung out in lukewarm Ivory suds removes that bluish film you often see and protects the finish. (And the safe pure suds keep my hands nice too.)"

The other day at a bridge party I discovered that Mrs. Carson was the attractive brisk little person who recently moved on our street. So we decided to walk home together.

"All that talk about maids!" she exclaimed. "I certainly didn't have anything to say, because—" showing me her hands—"these are my maids!"

I held out my own hands. "Me, too!" I boasted ungrammatically. And I think we stopped to laugh at ourselves.

"Why, I was so busy cleaning woodwork this morning that my hands were still warm from suds when I slipped into this chiffon dress," she confided, "in order to be on time to the luncheon. No manicure—but then, my hands came out of Ivory suds." She smiled at me impishly, "That's the way I keep people thinking that I have a maid."

"Me, too!" I said again. And then I know we giggled.

"But don't say you learned about Ivory from a linoleum salesman, too," she begged. So of course I wanted to know about the wise salesman.

"About three years ago," Mrs. Carson said, "I was buying some expensive inlaid linoleum. And what didn't the salesman tell me about strong soaps! . . . how they dry out the linoleum till crackles appear, and then it starts to wear out. He said there was nothing safer than Ivory Soap.

"'I use that on the baby,' I told him. But he said, 'Never mind—you take my advice and you'll save your linoleum.'

"Then one day the painter came to refinish the woodwork and I asked him why the enamel looked so dull after I had washed it. And again the answer was—'too strong soap.'

"And that's why I decided to use Ivory entirely," she ended, "for if kitchen soap was hard on such durable things, it certainly was too strong for my hands!"

Just then we found ourselves at Mrs. Carson's gate. "We'll have a table of bridge some night soon," I suggested, "then my husband will discover that there are two women who haven't maids who can keep their hands looking as if they had!"

"DUTCH FLOWER MARKET."
By R. A. Hoger

Above — Holland, famous for its flowers, is shown in this canvas by Hoger to be a veritable riot of color. Many artists find the brilliant coloring of the Dutch flower beds and markets a stimulating and pleasing theme.

"PORTRAIT OF WEBB, SENIOR."—By Gilbert Stuart. — Stuart, who is famous for his portraits of George Washington, painted this portrait of Webb, Sr., of County Donegal, in Dublin just before he returned to America to execute the Washington commission. He was born in Narragansett, Rhode Island, in 1775, began painting when 13 years old and studied under Benjamin West in England. He painted many portraits of Royalty and other notables and is represented in various art museums about the world. This painting hangs in the Butler Art Institute at Youngstown, Ohio.

"MATERNAL CARE."
By Willy Martens.

Right—This touching and peaceful scene was painted by one of the contemporary Dutch artists. Martens was born in The Hague in 1856, studied at the Amsterdam Academy, received honorable mention in Paris in 1886 and was made a member of the Legion of Honor in 1889.

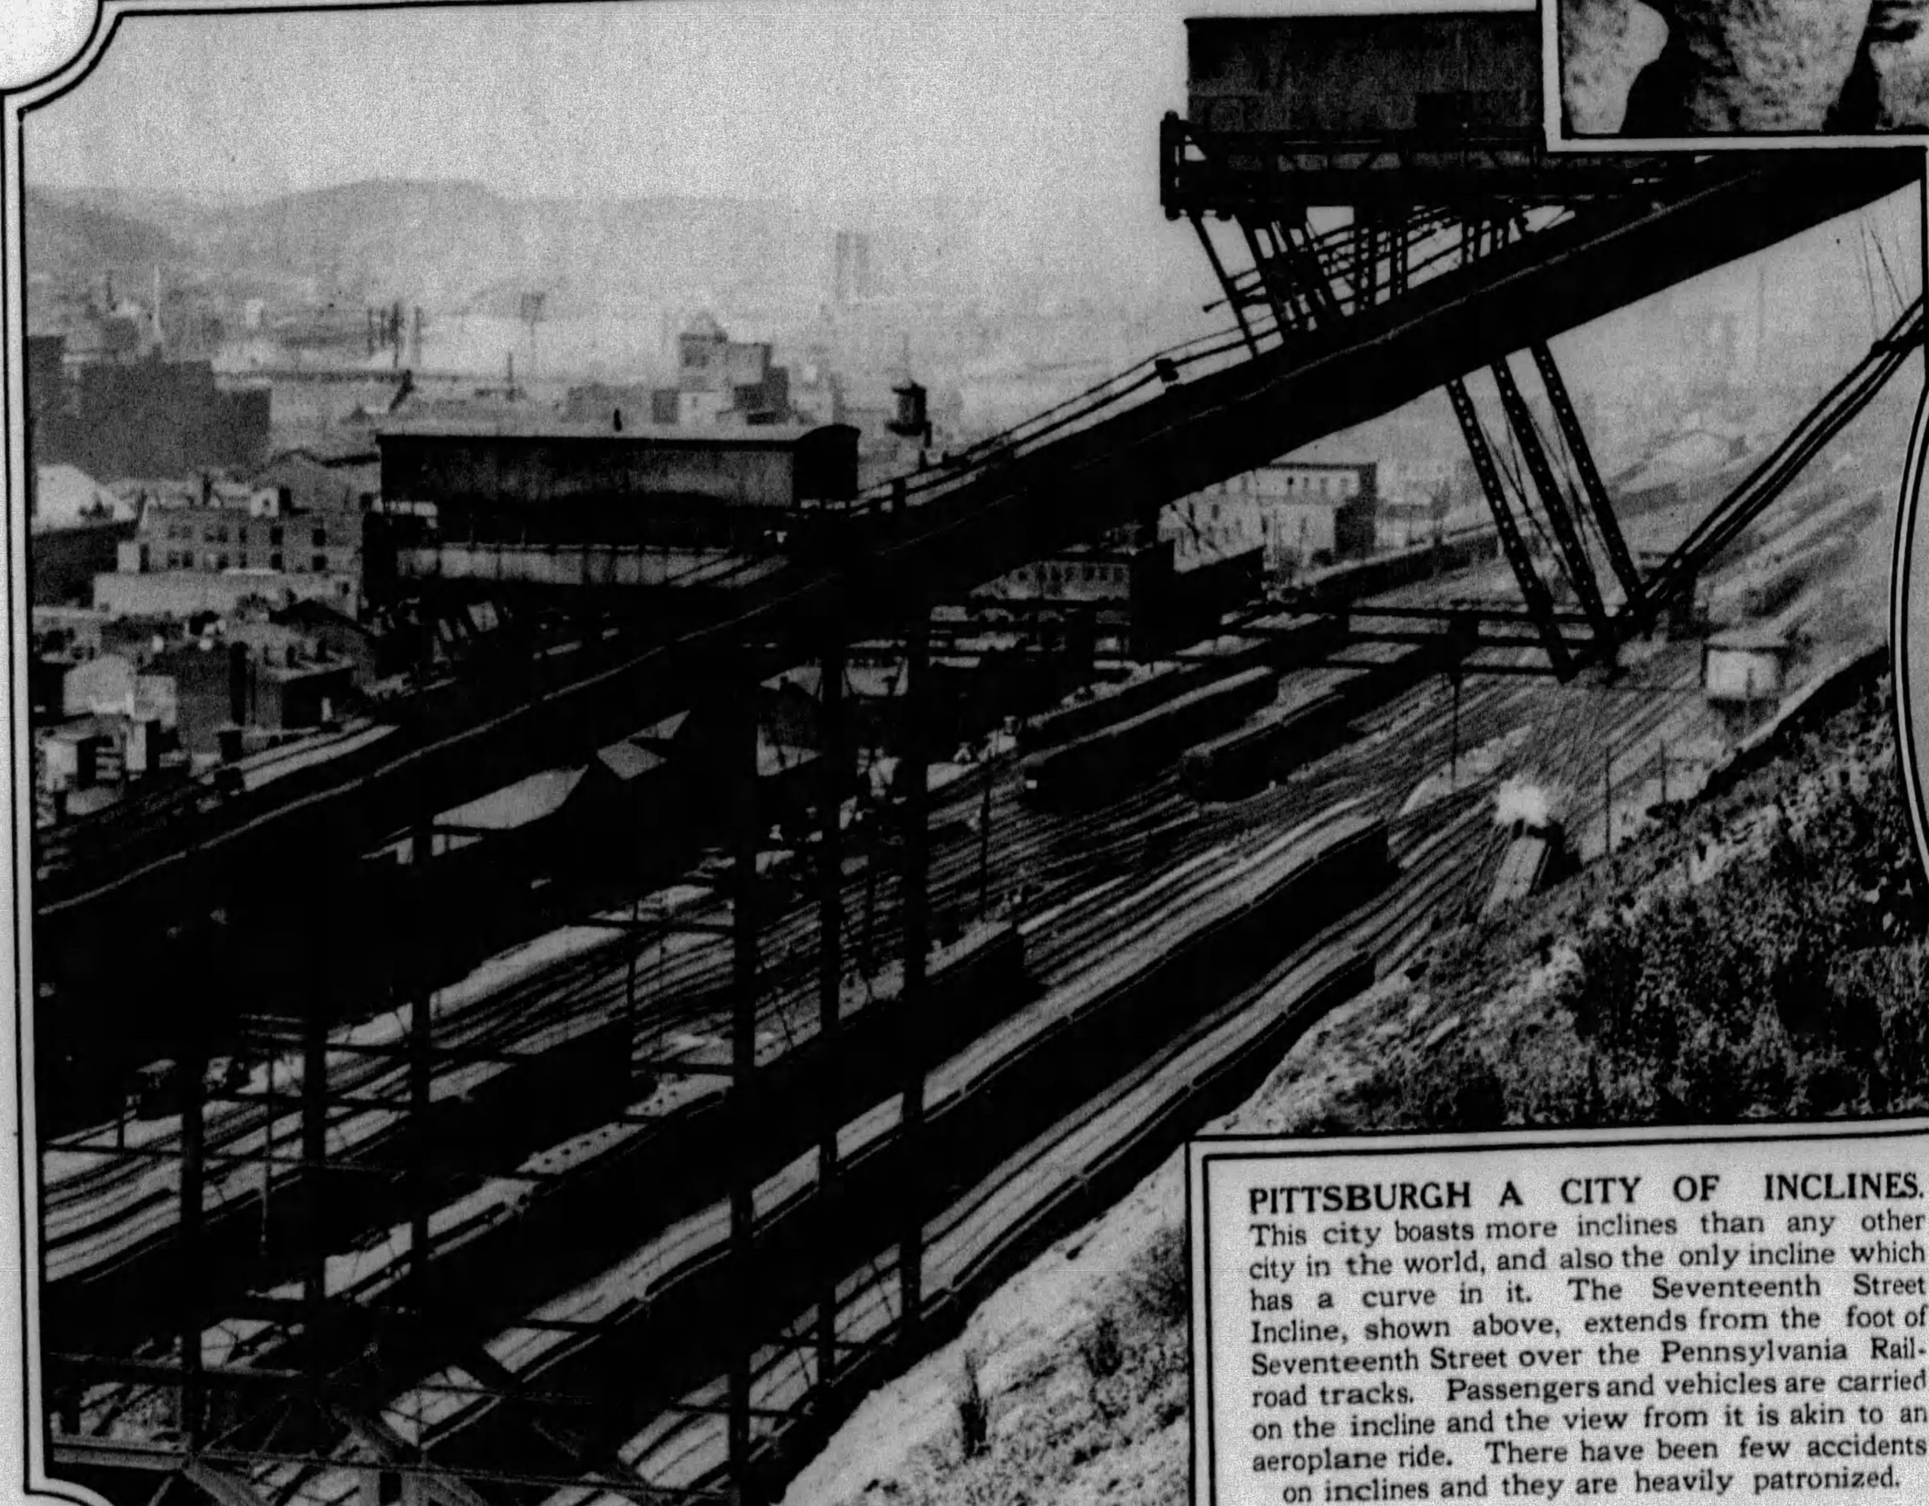
LAURA KNIGHT SKETCHES HOMER SAINT-GAUDENS—While in England recently the director of fine arts, Carnegie Institute, sat for a drawing by England's most distinguished woman artist. Mrs. Knight visited this country a few years ago and is one of two women privileged to write "A. R. A." after her name.

SHE SWINGS A GOOD BAT—Rose Marie Thomas, 12 years old, plays baseball with a girls' team at Washington Park and she makes many hits.

ECCLESIASTICAL ART. Replicas of the famous statues in Italian churches are fashioned in this studio in Fifth Avenue, near Dinwiddie Street. Here, in an atmosphere of old-world sculpture work Battista Zini, center, Amerigo Nicolai, right, standing, and Raphael Pacini, seated, right.

THIS IS NOT GASOLINE—BUT WATER. Right—In Egypt they sell water much as gasoline is sold in this country. This interesting picture shows a water vender dispensing his wares to a purchaser—or rather, she is helping herself to it while the seller takes his ease, and she will pay for it, too.

SHE LIVES ON A BARGE—Mrs. Howard Bunce is one of a number of women who are adept at navigating their own barges that are tied up in the barge colony at Edgewater, New Jersey, in the shadow of New York's skyscrapers.



PITTSBURGH A CITY OF INCLINES. This city boasts more inclines than any other city in the world, and also the only incline which has a curve in it. The Seventeenth Street Incline, shown above, extends from the foot of Seventeenth Street over the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks. Passengers and vehicles are carried on the incline and the view from it is akin to an aeroplane ride. There have been few accidents on inclines and they are heavily patronized.

THINKS PITTSBURGH IS DIFFICULT—Albert Klint, who hails from Davenport, Iowa, is shown here in a characteristic pose looking for work. He says he is a building construction employe.

PLAYING CHURCH CHIMES. There are ten bells in the spire of Trinity Cathedral, the largest six feet high. M. R. Leonhart, upper right, is shown at the keyboard. The bells are played Sunday mornings and evenings, and daily at noon during Advent, Epiphany and Lent. Some of the bells are more than 75 years old.

BIG GAME HUNTRESS. Lillian Lane, beautiful actress of the British Empire, is also an ardent big game hunter and her courage and coolness in the face of jungle perils and African beasts has won her to the hearts of Britishers.

JOHNSTOWN NOW LINK IN AIR ROUTE—With the dedication of the Johnstown Municipal Airport this city in Cambria County, on the Conemaugh River, becomes an important refuel point for planes on the Pittsburgh and New York route. This aerial view of the city shows the route along the river of the disastrous flood in 1889, resulting in the death of 2,205 persons and property damage estimated at $10,000,000. Johnstown now has a population of 73,000 and is in the center of an important coal and iron district.

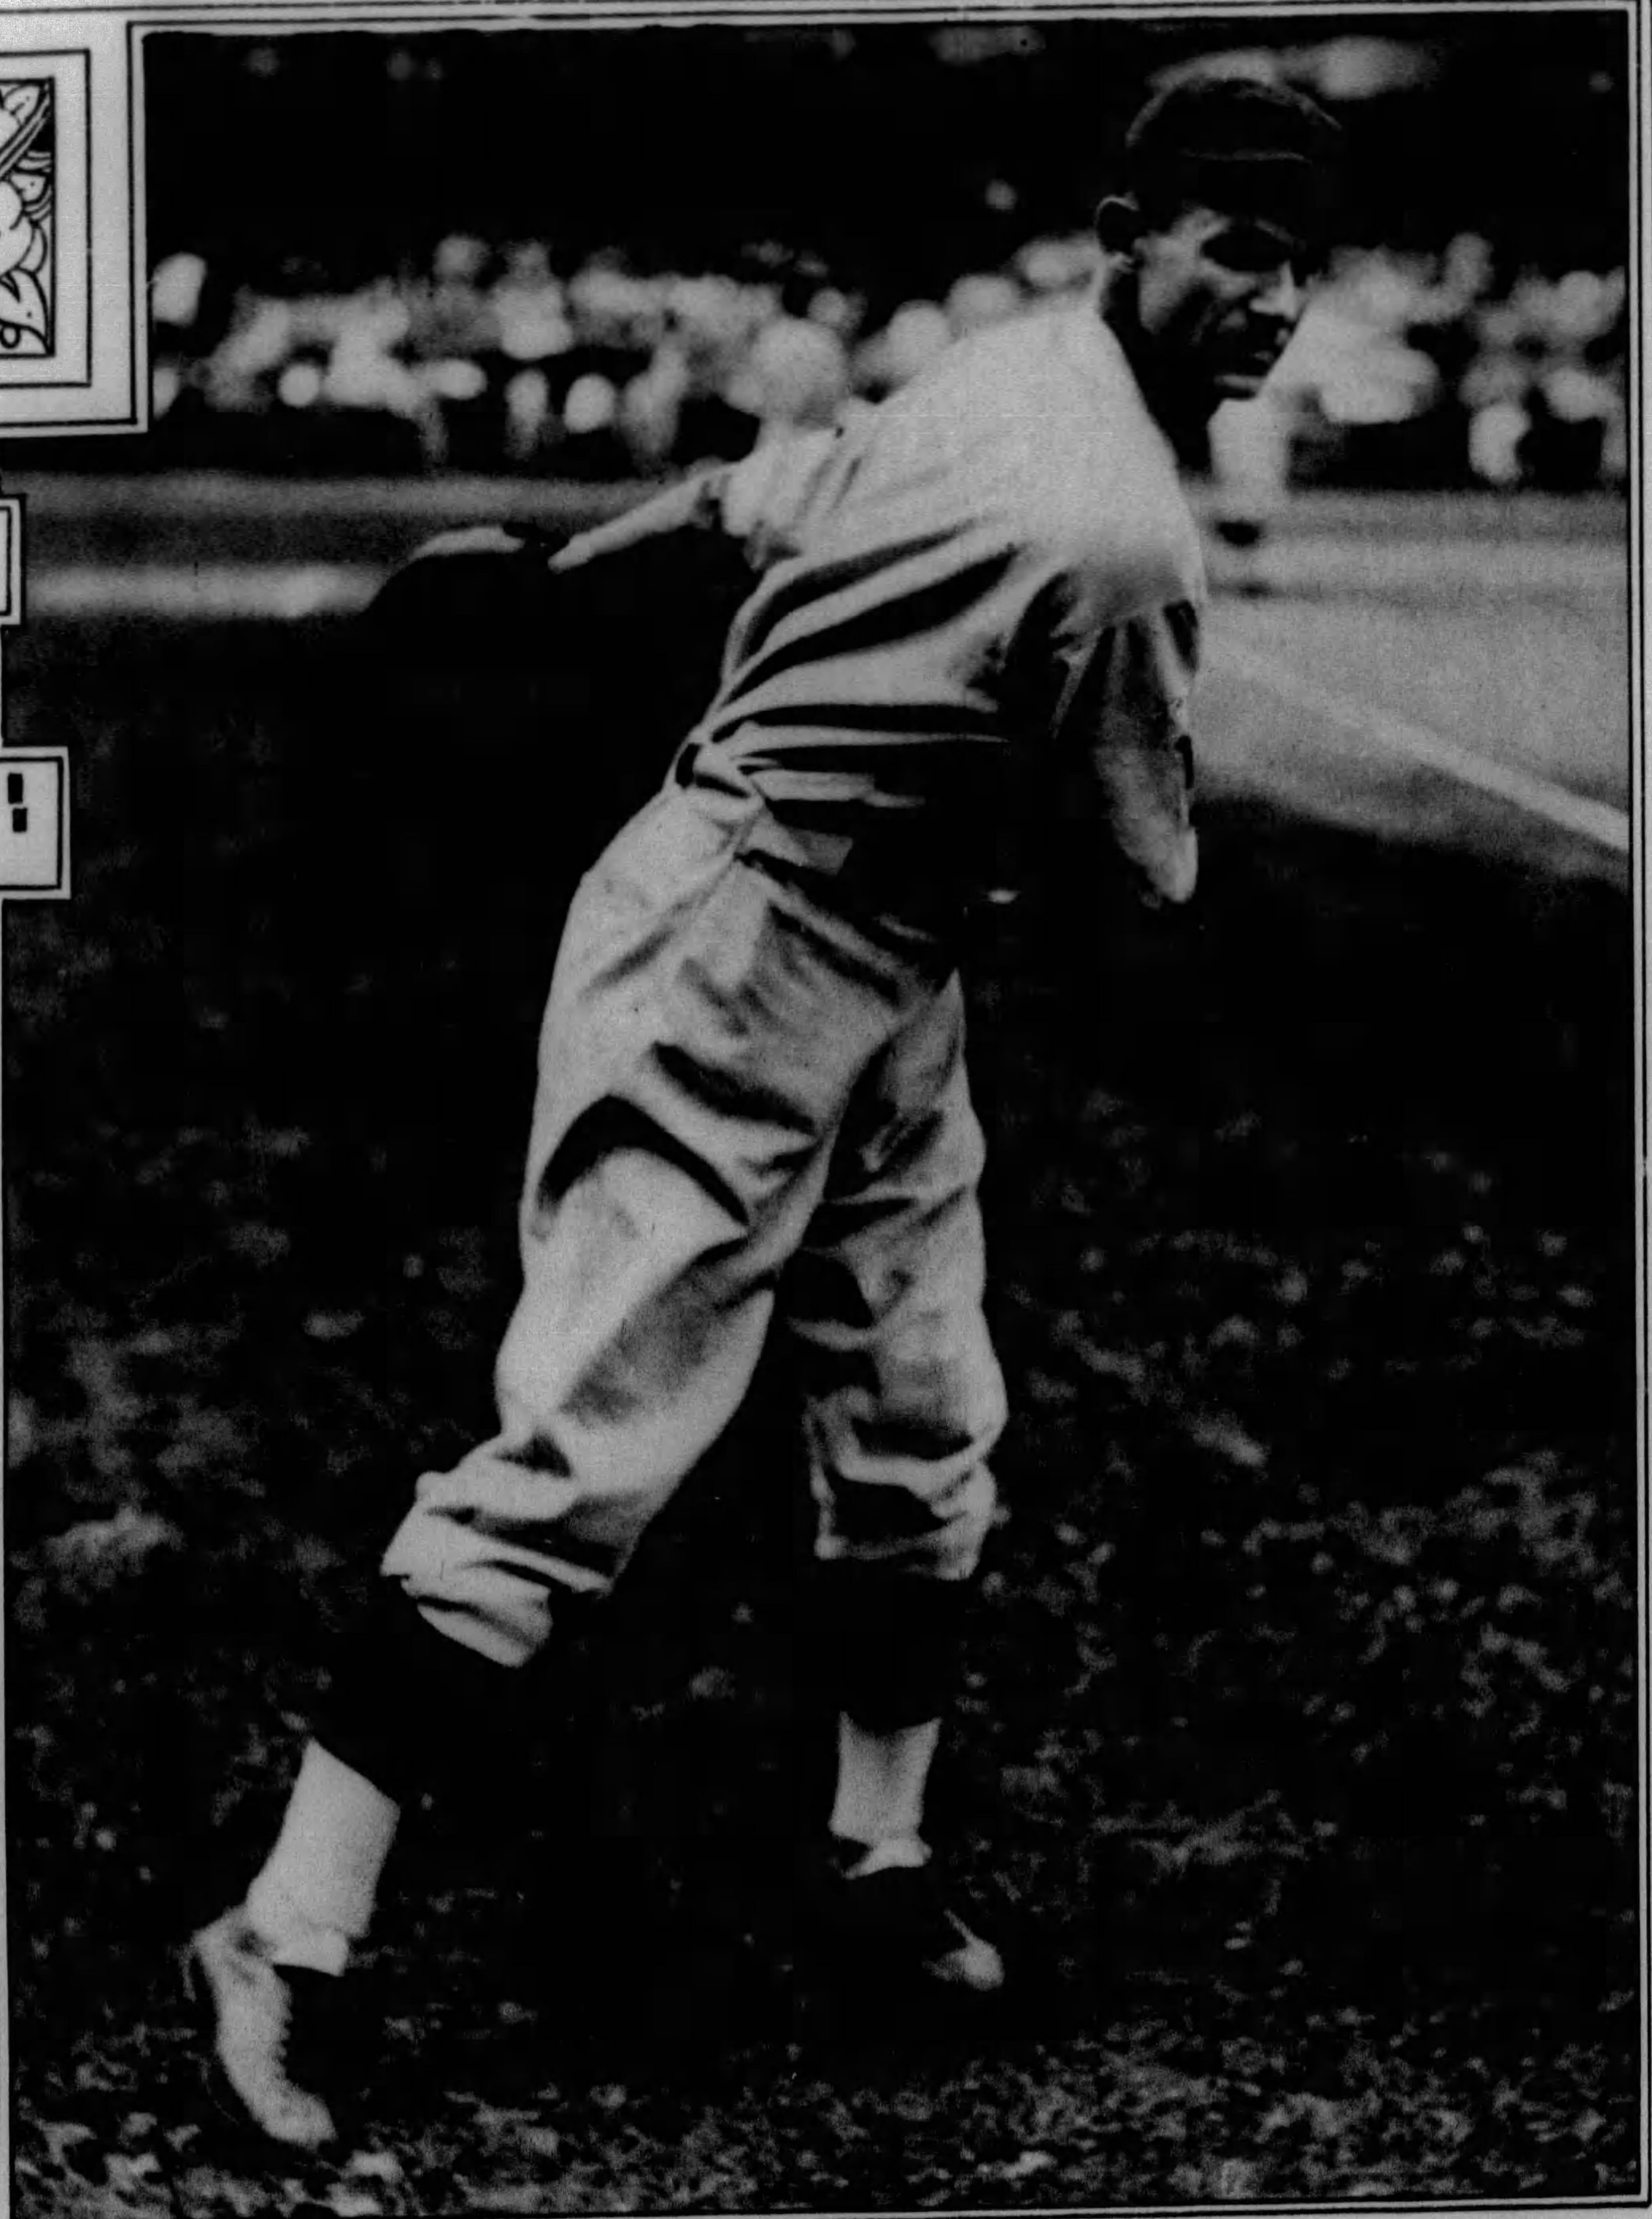
MANY RELICS OF THE THAW FAMILY GO UNDER HAMMER AT AUCTION SALE HELD AFTER DEATH OF MRS. MARY COPLEY THAW—Upper, an old Victoria, one of the splendid equipages of an earlier generation, was sold to Mrs. John M. Phillips, local clubwoman, for $3, and together with a brougham bought for $6, will become part of the museum display at the Brashear Settlement. Lower, general view of auction sale at the Thaw home in Beechwood Boulevard.

JESS PETTY—Although he has been having one of the worst years of his career Jess Petty has many boosters who think he will be able to show much of his known skill ere the present National League fight is ended. Petty was traded to the Pirates along with infielder Harry Riconda for Shortstop Glenn Wright, who has been unable to do little of anything for his Brooklyn bosses owing to a lame throwing arm. "The Silver Fox", as Petty is known to the baseball profession, is a smooth-working southpaw of much power. He has plenty of speed, a fine curve and good control.



"HEINE" MEINE—His last name rhymes with his first, does "Heine" Meine's, new Pirate pitching star, who was christened Henry. Meine was purchased by the Pirates last winter from the Kansas City club of the American Association. He was a spring holdout and did not get a lick of training, yet after he came into the fold he began to win with regularity, for Heine "knows his stuff". He is a big fellow and like Jess Petty, "Heine" saw service in France with the A. E. F. (Next week photographs of Manager "Donie" Bush and Coaches Jewel Ens and Oscar Stanage will be shown in this section).

"OH, BUT WE'RE HAVING A LOT OF FUN!"—And this fun consists in doing something practical—making baskets. These little girls meet at the Washington Playground, and, under the supervision of Miss Helen McWilliams, make some attractive baskets.

VIBRAPHONES REDUCE HEAD NOISES

A new and scientific discovery stimulates the hearing processes by utilizing sound waves through small silver devices that fit the ears perfectly. The vibrators are built inside the sound chambers. The instruments are so small that your friends will seldom know you are wearing them. Comfortable, easily put in the ears or removed. No wires. No batteries. No head bands. Nothing like them. This new and scientific triumph produces marvelous results. Head noises are reduced. Hearing gradually improves. Don't be handicapped or embarrassed another day by deafness.

31 RARE GOLDEN-BROWN and amber leaves of fine Virginia, Turkish and Kentucky (Burley) tobaccos are blended in Raleigh. If you crave details, the diagram below tells you how the tobaccos are blended. But if you just take the good things of life without machinery, you'll naturally and persistently smoke them — and enjoy them — "puff-by-puff"

Raleigh Twenty Cents PLAIN OR TIPPED

THE OLD WAY: Cigarette tobaccos are mixed together pretty well in a large hopper before they are fed into the cigarette. Result—too often a "hot spot," a "flare" or a "sting." Mixed, but not truly blended.

THE RALEIGH WAY: The 31 choice tobaccos—special grades of Kentucky (Burley), of Turkish and of rare Virginia—are actually laid lengthwise to give you an absolutely uniform mellow blend in every single puff.

GREAT VARIETY OF ANNUALS AND PERENNIALS IN THIS GARDEN ON THE VOSEMARY FARMS—Practically every type of annual and perennial bloom is included in this delightful garden on the farm of E. V. Babcock, near Valencia on the Babcock Boulevard. Flowers greet the eye in this garden from early spring until the first killing frost, and hundreds of motorists stop to admire the colorful display.
